2 SOCIETY GIRLS, 2 MAIDS KILLED IN BACK BAY FIRE

Two Boston society sub-debutantes lost their lives, a panic-stricken maid leaped four stories to her doom, and another girl, a cook, terror stricken, was asphyxiated in a closet where she had blindly sought refuge, in a fire horror at the home of W. L. Shearer, Jr., millionaire vice-president of the Paine Furniture Co., 47 Bay State Road, early today. One fireman was probably fatally injured and a number were overcome by smoke.

We Have Money Left Like Coral Builders More Foolish Scrapping A Prince's Good Idea

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1927, by Star Company

THIS REALLY is a prosperous country and has plenty of money left. After lending twenty-three thousand million dollars to Europe, ten billions in government war loans, thirteen billions in private loans, "call money," with which to speculate, costs only 4 per cent.

Money is getting cheaper and will continue to get cheaper, In July, American citizens will give a good imitation of the nonplaning or tolling lily and will receive five hundred and fifty million dollars in interest and dividends from corporations. All of which is rather discouraging to the bears.

PRESIDENT LOWELL of Harvard says man should work with an ideal aim, not merely for profit. That is sound, but none of us, not even President Lowell, can know what we are really doing, as we build for the civilization of a million years hence.

SACCO AND VANZETTI MAY GET RESPITE WHEN COUNCIL MEETS JULY 6

Sacco and Vanzetti may be given a respite when the Governor's Council meets July 6, it was learned from unofficial sources at the State House today. While the Council took no action today, it was rumored that the matter of a respite for the doomed men had been under discussion.

When the council grants the respite, Celestino Madeiros, a material witness in the Sacco-Vanzetti case, also doomed to die, will probably be included in the decree.

The men are condemned to die during the week of July 10, according to their status at present. The Governor's Council, at its regularly scheduled Wednesday meeting, July 6, will act in time to prevent the sentence from being carried out that week, according to the information learned today.

Accompanied by an impassioned appeal for justice, more than a half million names of petitioners for Sacco and Vanzetti were presented to Governor Fuller at the State House

DIAMOND PLANE AND 2 AUTOS FOR LINDBERGH

St. Louis, June 22 (A.P.).—An exquisitely cut diamond airplane, patent fishhooks, a silver loving cup, soaps, lotions, toy airplanes, liniments, gold medals and scores of other gifts which Charles A. Lindbergh has received were being opened today.

Lindbergh today accepted his second automobile gift, a sports sedan. He previously had accepted a roadster, painted silver gray, the color of his ocean-going monoplane, Spirit of St. Louis.

The more valuable gifts were being unpacked in the safe deposit vaults of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, to us on display, under heavy guard, at Jefferson Memorial Building in Forest Park.

LEAPS TO HIS DEATH FROM BOSTON BRIDGE

While scores of men and women looked on a man about 24 years old, mounted the iron railing on the Summer street extension bridge today and plunged to his death in the Fort Point channel below. Traffic officers nearby were summoned by the draw tenders, but when they reached the scene there was no sign of the man.

A man who witnessed the suicide's act said the body came to the surface once and did not reappear. A dark blue coat and cap were found on the sidewalk and on the inside of the coat was a name and address, but the name could not be distinguished. The address was Highland avenue, Somerville.

Members of the harbor police recovered the body about an hour later.

While police were dragging, a crowd of 5,000 morbidly curious gathered on and near the bridge, necessitating a hurry call for 20 reserve patrolmen to keep order and prevent a possible disaster.

HULL WOMAN ARRESTED AS DAYLIGHT BURGLAR

Charged with daring daylight breaks in Nantasket and other South Shore sections, Mrs. Elmira Boyd, of 8 street, Allerton Hill, was arrested by Hull police today. She was later arraigned in Hingham court, pleaded not guilty and was held for the September sitting of the grand jury.

Police took $1500 worth of alleged loot from her home and she was specifically charged with ransacking the home of a wealthy Hull resident. After an hour's questioning police say she admitted the break and said:

"The door was open; the place looked easy." She denied having accomplices.

Police are making further investigation.

"Sparrow" Holl Now on Theatre Pole Over 28 Hours

"Sparrow" Holl, at 1 P. M. today was still roosting atop the Metropolitan Building flagpole, at which time he had been on his lofty "roosting" perch just 28 hours, 45 minutes.

At the dawn's early light and at noon and then beyond the noon, the flagpole atop the Metropolitan Building in Tremont street still is triumphantly its burden in the identity, not of a flag, but of "Sparrow" Holl.

The "Sparrow," who twitters from Framingham, is out to beat the record of "Shipwreck" Kelly at Newark, N. J., for the world's title of champion long-distance flagpole sitter.

"Shipwreck" sat atop the Robert Treat Hotel flagpole in Newark for twelve days and twelve hours, but the "Sparrow" vows he can outsit "Shipwreck" by so much time that it will be ridiculous.

The flagpole sitter had his first reading hour today when the Boston Evening American was sent up to him.

Fire Heroine Tells of Fight for Girls

"I didn't care for myself; I wanted to save the two beautiful lives of those girls."

From the lips of a heroine, who, while she hung, flame-enwrapped, from a cornice of the Shearer home, four stories above the street, cried and shouted in an attempt to warn others in the house, came this sob of regret today.

Lying on a cot in the City Hospital, where a battle of hours by surgeons headed her back toward life again, Anna Dixon, governess of 19-year-old Janet Shearer, one of the four women who died in the fire, told to the Boston Evening American, through Rev. Raymond Chapman of her harrowing experience high above the street.

"It is so horrible," she moaned. "It will always be so terrible. I cannot think; I am sick; I will live always in a red furnace, with the faces of Janet and Betty before me disappearing in the horrible red.

"I can't see how it could happen. Everything was so happy at night.

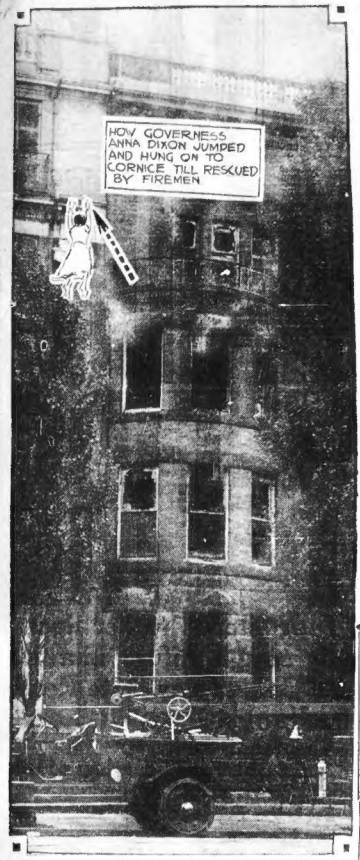
SOCIETY GIRLS DIE AMID FLAMES IN HUB MILLIONAIRE'S HOME



SAVED AFTER THRILLING FEAT

REMOVING BODY OF ONE OF BACK BAY FIRE VICTIMS

Helen McLaughlin, 35 years old, cook in the home of W. L. Shearer, Jr., 47 Bay State road, was smothered to death when she sought refuge in a closet as fire and smoke swept through the house, causing the deaths of three others, Mrs. Shearer's daughter, her chum and a housemaid.

EXAMINING RUINED INTERIOR

Firemen carefully go through the house to guard against fresh outbreak. This shows the ruins of once beautiful stairway and landing and charred room. The house interior, its valuable furnishings and a wealth of art works were destroyed almost before the firemen could begin their battle.

Boston American Man Discovered Fire

It was Herbert A. Levins, a night artist on the Boston Evening American staff, who discovered the Shearer fire early today, turned and raced his car for an alarm box and then returned to the scene and awakened occupants of adjoining homes. Here is his eyewitness story:

By HERBERT A. LEVINS.

I was going home from the office and was headed for Wellesley when I saw flames shoot out suddenly from the first floor windows on the house when I was almost opposite.

Before I realized it, I had turned the flivver automatically and was shooting back for a red light at the corner of Beacon street that indicated a fire alarm box.

I pulled in the box and "stepped on it" again back to the house thinking that I might be of some use. But I never saw a fire travel so fast in my life.

The red flames, weird and frightening, were roaring up from window to window, licking like the tongue of a snake—only there were millions of them, it seemed.

SEES WOMAN IN PERIL.

There wasn't a soul around when I got back but then I heard a woman's voice and, looking up, saw someone hanging from a window or a balcony or something. The smoke made things hazy, but the flames were lighting the place up.

I yelled at her not to let go; that I had called the engines and they would be right along. I think I shouted that I heard them coming then, but I don't remember clearly that part. Anyway, I heard her cry back that there was somebody on the third floor.

Nobody would have had a chance in that place and any attempt to try and save anybody inside would have meant one more death.

I went to the house next door, though, and woke them up there because although the Shearer house was then almost entirely enveloped in flame, but a few minutes had elapsed since I first arrived.

Then the first trucks arrived, they ran up the aerial ladder and took the woman from the place where she was hanging, and then shot the big truck around to the rear when somebody and there was another rescue at the back.

BODY ON GROUND.

When the truck had been placed in position, however, a fan of flame illuminated the rear and the body of a woman was sighted on the ground.

She was about three feet out from the building and was lying on a screen, as if she had leaped through a window and had taken the screen with her in her sail to death.

It was the toughest fire I've ever seen.

TELLS OF FIGHT FOR GIRLS

and everything is so horrible now.

"When I awoke I was stifling. There was a strange creaking, tearing sound in the room, and when I realized it was smoke that was choking me I became terrified for a second.

"Then I thought of the two girls in the room on the third floor, below mine, and I jumped up and opened the door.

"Thick smoke that was red in color burst in the doorway and I slammed it shut again and ran to the window, climbing out to the balcony.

Screamed for Help

"Out there I screamed for help, but I heard no sound come back except the terrifying sound of the fire. It was the same sound you hear when a paper fire is burning in a stove in a fast draft. I can't explain it.

"My cries were not heard. I could see nobody in the street. Then I leaned far over the balcony rail and cried to Betty and Janet. I don't know how long it was, but the fire kept reaching up over the balcony and the smoke made me dizzy.

"I didn't know what to do, but I knew I could not live there. I reached way over and grasped the stone corner and somehow I got out there, where I slipped and fell, but hung on.

"There, I was nearer Janet's room and I shouted and cried to the girls, hoping to make them hear. I didn't care for myself; I wanted to save the two beautiful lives of those girls.

"But the sound of my voice was carried away by the noise of the fire and I guess they could not hear me. I hung on until it seemed an eternity.

"And then they took me down and I don't remember anything else until I was here."

Monument street, Charlestown; overcome by smoke.

Hoseman Frank Gruttner, of Engine 37; overcome by smoke.

Captain Daniel Crowley, of Engine 37; overcome by smoke.

The heroine of the fire was Anna Dixon, governess of the two girls and the only one to escape from the ill-fated mansion with her life.

For minutes she clung precariously by her fingertips to the third floor cornice of an adjoining house, refusing the aid of rescuers until they had battled to save the lives of her two charges. The woman collapsd as a fire ladder was raised to her, and she fell into the arms of a fireman.

The two girls, the eldest of whom had graduated only last week from Rosemary Hall at Greenwich, Ct., were trapped in their bedroom in the third floor of the mansion.

The charred bodies of the girls, burned so badly that identification was made with difficulty, were found near the window of their bedroom.

The girls, however, were not burned to death, but died of asphyxiation, according to the report of Medical Examiner Timothy Leary. He declared that both girls had been overcome by smoke and lapsed into unconsciousness and death before they could reach the window, and before the flames reached them.

Had the girls been able to reach the window, there was a chance that they might have been saved.

The maid, Alice Scott, was asleep in her room on the fourth floor of the home when the fire broke out. With the flames tearing up the stairway she became panic-stricken and leaped to the pavement and her death in the rear of the house. Had she remained at the window a few moments she would have been rescued.

The cook, Helen McLaughlin, was in her room when she was awakened by the sound of the flames. In wild panic she fled into a closet in her room where she was asphyxiated. Her body was found hours afterward, covered with debris, lying in the bottom of the closet.

Fireman Frank Meledy, who it is feared will be the fifth victim of the fire, suffered his injuries when he fell through the third floor of the charred building while searching for the body of the cook.

The girls retired about 11 o'clock last night after making plans for tennis and a shopping tour today. It was the last ever seen of them alive.

Mr. and Mrs. Shearer were not at home at the time of the tragedy. They were aboard their palatial yacht Paprika, which was anchored off the Boston Yacht Club in South Boston, intending to cruise to New York, today.

Shortly after daylight they were notified of the tragedy.

Hysterically they made their way to shore where a waiting motor rushed them to the city.

An added element of tragedy was the fact that Henry Howes of No. 192 Marlboro street, father of Betty Howes, was the first to learn of the tragedy and it was he and his wife who rushed to the Boston Yacht Club carrying the word of the fire horror to Mr. and Mrs. Shearer.

The Shearer household consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Shearer, the two girls, Janet and Betty; the maid, the cook and the governess.

Just Back From School

Janet Shearer attended the school at Greenwich, Ct., where she graduated last week, while Betty Howes attended the Dawes school at Briarcliffe, N. Y.

The girls returned for the Summer vacation only a day or two ago and had planned a glorious Summer together.

The Howes family had moved from Boston to the beach for the Summer but last evening Mr. and Mrs. Howes returned to their Marlborough street home to attend to

BACK BAY TRAGEDY VICTIM

Janet Shearer, daughter of William L. Shearer, Jr., who lost life in fire horror today. Three others perished in the blaze. All were trapped in the Shearer home, No. 47 Bay State road, by swift spread of the flames.

SHEARERS' JOY IS TURNED TO SUDDEN GRIEF BY TRAGEDY

In a world whose aura was colored and peaceful and glad, and whose horizon held no cloud, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Shearer, Jr., retired for sleep aboard their yacht "Paprika," to be in readiness for an early start on a cruise today that would end Friday with attendance at the Harvard-Yale boat races on the Thames.

They were awakened into a world of horror and blackness, a world shriveled in the searing hand of Death, gray with the swirling ashes and numbed realization of tragedy.

But a half a dozen miles away, the father and mother were told, Janet Shearer and her chum, Betty Howes, pretty debutantes, were dead in the Shearer home in Bay State road.

"Oh, I don't want to know it; I don't want to hear it," moaned the father as he stumbled in the boat of Harry Kelly, bostsman of the Boston Yacht Club, who had taken Mr. and Mrs. Henry Howes of Marlborough street out to the anchored yacht to break the dire news.

The Shearers had gone for a short cruise yesterday and the latter part of the day and most of the evening had been devoted to storing supplies and making the yacht shipshape generally for the trip toward New London today.

An automobile waited for the party to return from the yacht and they were conveyed in this to the scene of the tragedy and then the grief-stricken parents were taken to the Howe home.

Hultman Orders Full Probe of Fire That Cost Lives of Four

A complete investigation of the ruins of the ill-fated Shearer home will be held before any effort is made by the Boston fire department to fix the cause of the blaze which cost the lives of four persons, according to an announcement by Fire Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman, who spent more than an hour inspecting the ruins.

Commissioner Hultman, with other officials of the fire department, went over the ruins from basement to roof.

"We have not determined the cause of the fire yet," said the commissioner, after his inspection. "A thorough investigation will be made but until that is completed we cannot say what might have caused this tragedy."

Fire Commissioner Hultman visited the scene shortly before noon.

"The Shearer home was a house of the type that does not offer any means of escape. There are many homes like it in Boston. When such a tragedy happens the feeling is that something should be done about it, but this effect wear away after a time and the danger is allowed to continue," the commissioner said.

Shearer Servants Are Left Grief-Stricken by Tragedy

Servants of the family of William L. Shearer, Jr., broke down and cried when they visited the scene of the fatal fire.

Hugo Kirk, the family butler, who ordinarily occupies a room on the fourth floor of home, was aboard the Shearer yacht, where he performs the duties of steward during the yachting season.

The two Shearer chauffeurs do not live at the home. With all three servants both Janet Shearer and Betty Howes were great favorites.

Kirk, the butler, was greatly affected as he wandered about through the ruins.

Sidelights in Back Bay Fire Tragedy

WHILE the ruins were steaming and smoking, black and gaunt the Rev. Raymond Chapman of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Beaumont avenue, rushed up to the scene, inquiring anxiously for William L. Shearer, seventeen-year-old Harvard student and his friend. He was told the boy was understood to be on his way to Europe.

Mr. Shearer was to have left today for a short cruise before heading his yacht into New London for the Harvard-Yale boat races next Friday. It was to complete provisioning and storing that he spent the night on board the yacht.

Deputy Fire Chief Fox and a search party found the body of the fourth victim in a closet at the rear of the house, after the rescued Mrs. Dixon, at the hospital, had insisted that one member of the household still was unaccounted for. The search party went through all the closets, following their knowledge, gained through long experience, that many persons trapped in a burning building seek vain refuge in closets.

Mrs. Frederick Spring of the Hotel Shernton and fifteen-year-old Adelaid Green, also of the hotel, became hysterical when they rushed to the scene of the fire and learned that the girls were dead. Mrs. Spring and Miss Green spent last evening visiting them. They remained with them until 10 p. m. and planned to spend part of today with them.

"We talked over the good times we would have this Summer," moaned the Green girl, as they were carrying the shrouded forms of her two chums from the ruins.

Mrs. Frank Knowlton of Beacon street, who has been a close friend of the victims, was among those arriving at the scene shortly after the fire was discovered. "Had I only accepted their invitation to stay to dinner last night and for the evening this would never have happened," she said. "We always eat up late when I stayed, but last night I left them before dinner."

William Shearer, Sr., grandfather of Janet Shearer, is in Europe. He was cabled today of the tragic death of his favorite grandchild.

Close friends of the family said the total loss probably would never be known. They said the house was filled with precious antiques and rare furniture.

* * *

The glare rom the flames at the fire could be seen six miles away. Early morning workers in Cambridge, Medford, Everett and Malden reported that they could see the reflection of the flames.

STORMS AGAIN DELAY HOP OF BYRD PLANE

New York, June 22 (A.P.).—Pranks of fickle weather off and about Nova Scotia indicated today that the Byrd transatlantic expedition cannot start until tomorrow at the earliest.

James Kimball of the New York office of the Weather Bureau frowned as he inspected the first tidings of the day.

He was about prepared to advise, he said, that a start even tomorrow would be unwise.

Even before the ships at sea reported and word came from New Foundland, Nova Scotia sent word of a storm and dense fog off the Nova Scotian coast and rainfall totaling 3.56 inches in 24 hours at Halifax.

The America continued in a state of preparedness. All hands were ready and the mail was aboard as the weather man said "No."

Byrd Speeds Back to N. Y. After Receiving Yale Degree

New Haven, Ct., June 22 (A.P.).—Everything and everybody is ready for the ocean hop except the weather and the weatherman," Commander Richard E. Byrd said as he made a dash for the train after commencement ceremonies at Yale University this noon, at which he had added to his list of honorary degrees with one of master of arts.

Commander Byrd received honorary degrees of civil engineer, master of science and doctor of laws in the past few days prior to his coming to Yale.

It had been expected that the commander would stay for the alumni luncheon and speak to the host of alumni, but no sooner were the ceremonies over when he was escorted to the presidential room in Woolsey Hall for a brief handshaking and then left for the railroad station.

Accuse Coolidge of "Slaughter" in Using Bait

Rapid City, S. D., June 22 (I.N.S.).—In behalf of the Izaak Walton League of America, Edward G. Taylor today lodged a protest against President Coolidge's use of larded hooks and worms as trout bait.

Taylor called such fishing "slaughter," and urged "in the name of good sportsmanship" that the President use barbless hooks so the fish he cannot eat may be thrown back into the water.

"The only excuse for a man to use worms would be his starving," Taylor said.

Shortly before 4 o'clock this morning Herbert Levine, an artist employed on the night shift of the Boston Evening American was passing the Shearer home on his way home when he heard the roar of flames. He was at first unable to locate the source of the noise as the front windows of the mansion were still intact and no smoke was to be seen.

Then a horrible sight greeted the eyes of the artist. With a crash windows on the third and fourth floor burst outwards and long tongues of flame leaped toward the sky. As he looked upward he saw the governess spring from her fourth floor window and leap to the third floor cornice of the adjoining building, where she hung in momentary danger of being dashed to her death in the pavement below.

Driven Back by Blaze

The artist called Mounted Officer Leo Solin, who sounded the first alarm.

Then the artist and the policeman dashed into the burning house in an effort at rescue. They were driven back by a solid wall of flames at the second landing on the stairway.

Crashing their way into the adjoining building, they came to where the governess clung perilously to the cornice far above the street.

"Don't mind me. Don't mind me. I can hang on a while yet. For God's sake save the girls. Get them out, they are on the third floor," the governess shouted.

The artist and the policeman again tried to force their way into the burning mansion. It was an inferno.

By this time the first of the firemen had arrived. The second and the third alarms were quickly sounded. For an hour the firemen battled the fire before they could make their way to the bodies lying near the third-floor windows.

It was while the fire apparatus was within sight that Alice Scott, the maid, leaped to her death. Cut off by the flames which had roared up the open stairway of the house and had leaped into her bedchamber, the woman threw the window open high. She did not pause, and the few spectators in the alleyway below were horrified to see her plunge, headlong, to the pavement below.

Plunges to Her Death

She was dead when help reached her side. Her skull was fractured and it is believed her neck was broken.

The fire swept through the entire building from the cellar to the roof. This leads the fire authorities to believe the fire started in the basement. When the firemen ran the first hose lines in the building were roaring flames.

The governess, carried half conscious to safety from the precarious place where she clung on for life, was rushed to the City Hospital, but no word was received. Some time later she was told that her two charges were dead and that the maid had leaped to her doom.

The governess insisted that Holah McLaughlin, the cook, was somewhere in the ruins of the house. The fire department officials had searched the ruins without finding any trace of the cook, but when the governess was so insistent another search was made and the body of the cook was found under the debris in the closet of her room.

The flames had not reached her, but she had smothered to death from the smoke and the heat as the flames ate their way through her bedroom.

When the first fire companies arrived at the scene they learned that two, and possibly three, persons were in the burning building. With utter disregard for their own safety they attacked the fire from every floor of the four story building.

Lieutenant Eugene Carroll fought his way through one of the floors with fire on every side of him. He did not see a gas mask and he was soon cut off from his mates.

The entire force of Engine 16 under the direction of Captain O'Brien went to the rescue of Carroll. He was finally dragged from the burning structure unconscious and was rushed to the City Hospital where his name is on the danger list.

Fireman Frank Melody was making his way across the third floor in search of bodies when the flooring gave way. He was buried in a mass of burning debris but was quickly rescued and taken to City Hospital where his name, too, is on the danger list.

The body of Janet Shearer was the first one found by the firemen. It was wrapped in blankets and taken to the Northern Morgue, where it was viewed by Medical Examiner Timothy Leary.

Bodies are Identified

The bodies of the other victims were taken to the Southern Mortuary.

Positive identification of the Shearer and Howes girls, as well as Miss Scott, the maid, was made by Attorney Frank Knowlton, who represented the Shearer and Howes families.

Accompanied by an assistant, S. G. Hall, Attorney Knowlton called at the Northern and Southern mortuaries and, after examining the bodies, announced that his identification was positive.

"The only one I am not sure of is Miss McLaughlin," said the attorney. "I ha seen her only once or twice at the Shearer home, but the two girls and the maid I knew very well."

This identification was satisfactory to the authorities and the three bodies were turned over to an undertaker.

Art Works Destroyed

Mr. Knowlton announced that the parents of the dead girls would not visit the morgue and would not endeavor to view the bodies.

Two sisters of Anna Dixon, the governess, who knew all the help at the Shearer home, identified the bodies of the cook and the maid.

Meanwhile, the stricken Shearer parents, with their home in ruins and with the awful tragedy upon them, sought refuge in the Howes home on Marlborough street, where they denied themselves to everyone.

The Scott girl, who leaped to her death, had been subjected to a terrific heat before she leaped from the window at the rear of the house, according to the medical examiner.

"Her clothing had not been burned, but the condition of the skin showed that she had been subjected to an intense heat and this probably drove her to leap from the window when, in a moment or two more, she might have been saved," said the medical examiner.

No sooner had the flames been extinguished than the officials of the fire department started an investigation to determine, if possible, the cause of the fire.

Deputy Chief Fox directed an electrical expert to visit the scene and examine the electrical wiring in the building. The fire, the officials are convinced, started in the basement of the building and burned straight through to the roof.

The residence contained, among its other furnishings, works of art that were almost priceless. All these were destroyed. The monetary loss is estimated at between $50,000 and $75,000.

HEROINE'S SISTER HELPS IDENTIFY FIRE VICTIMS

ON SAD VISIT TO MORGUE

EYEWITNESSES TELL OF DEATH LEAP OF WOMAN

How one woman leaped to her death and a second was rescued from the cornice by firemen as she was about to jump were related by eyewitnesses at the Shearer fire in Bay State road.

Edward Eastman of No. 46 Mountford street, Dana, said:

"I arrived as the whole house was bursting into flames. It was a terrible trap of fire and the inmates were caught like rats without a chance for their lives. Flames seemed to belch and mushroom from floor to floor until they reached the top.

"I ran around to the back, which faces the Esplanade and the Charles River and saw a woman crawl out of the top attic window. She appeared to be gasping and to be horribly burned.

"The woman paid no attention to my yells and came plunging down. She did not seem to jump, but just to fall off the sill and down the four stories."

A second eyewitness, F. E. Jarvis of No. 37 Bay State road, but a few doors away, told this story of what he saw:

"I was returning home when I noticed flames coming from the front of the building. Together with about four other men who saw the fire at the same time, I ran in that direction. One wheeled off and went to turn in an alarm.

"When we got there, it was evident that there was no use trying to enter the house. It was a red furnace of flame.

"I think that type of house has an elevator running from the cellar to the roof, and the air sucking up this well probably gave the flames impetus.

CLUNG TO CORNICE.

"To me it seemed as if the flames first shot from the basement to the roof in one spiral column and then spread quickly all over the house.

"A woman—Mrs. Dixon, I believe she was—appeared in a third story window and scrambled out on the balcony there. I thought she was going to leap, so I yelled with the others at her not to jump, but the blaze of the flames probably deadened our voices.

"I saw her get up on the railing which stands about three feet high on the balcony that reaches to the adjoining house. She seized the stone coping which abuts about a foot and hung on.

"I don't think she could have held out much longer, but the apparatus came and took her down."

LIVES LIFE TO SAVE WOMAN FROM BULLETS

Claremont, N. H., June 22 (A.P.).—Arthur Boyd of Newport died at the Claremont General Hospital today from bullet wounds received last night at the home of Leonard Clement in Newport.

Clement, at whose home Boyd, a shoe factory worker, was a boarder, was arrested after the shooting.

The police said that Clement had accused Boyd, who came from Canada two months ago of being too friendly with Mrs. Clement and that when he found the two together on the piazza he aimed a revolver at his wife.

Boyd stepped in front of her and three bullets entered his body.

STARVING OUT PRISONERS IN MINE MUTINY

Lansing, Kan., June 22 (I. N. S.)—Three hundred and twenty-eight prisoners who barricaded themselves in a prison mine at Kansas State Penitentiary, today were left to "use their own judgment" about coming out. The convicts, detailed to underground work, mutinied when refused cigarets.

Fourteen prison guards were overpowered and an ultimatum sent out "no cigarets, no coal."

"They can stay until they get ready to eat," Acting Warden R. H. Hudspeth declared today, and he added he intended to starve the prisoners out. "They can use their own judgment," he said.

Meanwhile eleven prisoners above ground were in solitary confinement and many others under heavy guard following a prison riot which climaxed the mutiny below ground. One prisoner was wounded. The prisoners in the cell houses also took up the cry, "No cigarets, no work, no peace."

Acting Warden Hudspeth reported all quiet today. Today prisoners were being questioned closely to ascertain who were responsible for a plot to set fire to the twine factory.

BREAKS ARM IN PLUNGE FROM BECK HALL

William Otis, 21, of No. 33 Beaver place, Boston and formerly of Nahant, suffered a broken left arm, a possible fracture of the skull and contusions of the face when he fell from a window of the second story of Beck Hall Harvard dormitory, shortly after midnight.

He had been attending class day exercises and a spread at Beck Hall as the guest of one of the graduates when he leaned from one of the French windows and fell to the brick sidewalk on Massachusetts avenue.

His screams attracted students who were still up celebrating class day and they took him to the Cambridge Hospital on 5th Auburn street, where he was attended by Dr. Dudley.

His brother, Harrison Gray Otis of the Tennis and Racquet Club of Boston, was notified by the hospital authorities. Although semi-conscious during the night, he regained his senses today and it is believed the head injury will not be serious.

him. When he had perused that some time he had a magazine hoisted aloft.

In between he sent a note down to the Evening American reporter. In thenote, penciled, he wrote:

"I intend to stay up here until I have broken Kelly's record, if I can. Last night I got about an hour's sleep on the instalment plan. I spoke for five minutes over the radio today from Station WNAC. The "Mike" was hoisted up to me.

"My sleep I got on the minute-doze, twenty-minutes-awake basis. It was quiet up here until about 11 o'clock. Then a breeze sprang up and it got quite chilly. About midnight I put on an extra pair of overalls. These were sent up to me by my attendant, Neil McLellan.

"So far today, I have had two cups of coffee and a couple of chocolates, and I feel perfect."

"Had a shave this morning," he cried down. "The stuff was sent up in a bucket."

The "Sparrow" took photographs of the crowds down in Tremont street with the camera of "Gus" Williams, American staff photographer.

BABY 'NOBODY WANTS' LEFT ON CHURCH STEP

Barnstable, June 22 (A.P.)—The wanderings of a 22-second-old wife with a two-hour-old infant that no one wanted, ended in Barnstable County jail today after Mrs. Emma Urquhart pleaded guilty in District Court to abandoning her baby on the steps of the Congregational Church in Hyannis.

Her case was continued until Friday for disposition after State detective Ernest Bradford had reported to the court her version of a slave's existence, a marriage broken by a quarrel of a love affair in Woods Hole last Summer with a young man who, she asserts, is the father of her child, a tot from Hatteras where the baby was born, to her husband's home in New Bedford. In the hope of reconciliation and her desperate effort in Falmouth to rid herself of the baby her legal mate refused to take in.

She took the train from New Bedford to Woods Hole yesterday, the court learned, to see if a married friend there would take the little boy. This effort failed and she went to Falmouth, a few miles away. After walking the streets for hours she left the child, bundled in a shabby blanket, on the steps of the church.

A neighbor, aroused by the baby's wails, called a policeman. A short time later Mrs. Urquhart was found in Woods Hole. She admitted the child was hers and was arrested. The baby was turned over to a welfare agency.

to haul additional gifts still at the postoffice. A valuation of $150,000 was placed on the gifts sent from Paris by express.

In Lindbergh's mail were candy, books, pajamas, overalls, religious medals and toy airplanes. Offers of gifts included several from brick manufacturing firms of materials to build a house.

Children and others with a talent for drawing sent paintings and sketches of how they imagined the spirit of St. Louis looked in its flight across the Atlantic.

The comparative absence of "mash notes" was noted. The great majority offered congratulations in a dignified manner and in only a few cases did girls ask for dates.

Included in the gifts to be on view at Jefferson Memorial are the decorations which the flyer received in the United States and France, England, Belgium, a gold key to the City of London, a cup presented by the London Daily Mail and the diamond airplane, presented by French flyers.

BATTERED SCHOONER IS TOWED INTO PORT

New London, June 22 (A.P.)—Her sails gone, and showing other signs of the battering received in the storms which have swept the Atlantic for the past several days, the 1724-ton schooner Yukon was towed into port today by the coast guard destroyer Shaw.

The vessel, bound for New Bedford from the Cape Verde Islands with passengers and freight aboard, was picked up at sea off 30 Man's Land late last night.

today by members of the defence committee.

From humble appeals to the Pennsylvania miners to college presidents, petitioners had signed their names to the appeal in the world famous case of the two men condemned to die for a murder committed seven years ago. In two huge scrolls almost a mile each in length the lists were presented to the Governor. Sandwiched in between the names of a dock worker and a stock yard driver, wealthy bankers might find their names and title. From all parts of the country the petitioners come, and all classes, politically, socially and economically, were represented.

The committee also presented a letter in which it pointed out reasons for asking for an investigation of the Sacco-Vanzetti case. The committee did not see the Governor. The lists, rolled on two huge reels and bound in wire were left in the Governor's chamber. Gardner Jackson, secretary, said thousands of names were still coming in and slow returns from many parts of the country would probably be received later.

"These hundreds of thousands who petition you," said the letter, "believe above all their deep feeling that these two men did not have a fair trial. Your Excellency will perhaps ask: What do these people know of the case? Is it conceivable, Your Excellency, that such widespread public concern could have been aroused by nothing?"

Judge Robert Grant, who, with President Stratton of Technology and Lowell of Harvard was appointed to the commission to study the case, called at the State House today and was in conference with Herman L. MacDonald, the governor's secretary. He was unable to say when the commission would hold its first meeting, but said he expected they would get together next week.

COMET CAN BE SEEN TONIGHT

Pons-Winnecke, a tramp comet which pokes its nose out of the heavens every six years will be visible to the naked eye one hour after sundown tonight in the northeastern sky.

Star-gazing will be in order and the layman should have no difficulty in locating it, according to astronomers at Harvard Observatory.

The earth last saw Pons-Winnecke in 1921 when it appeared about 50,000,000 miles away.

Those who desire to take a peek at the celestial visitor should be on the lookout for a small star surrounded by fog. It will shift its position from now until the end of the month, when it disappears.

The comet will be visible to the naked eye for the first time in more than 100 years. The present visit is its nearest approach to Mother Earth, a mere 3,000,000 miles away. The visitor is quite unlike bodies of similar nature—the Pons-Winnecke has no tail.

Tool Thief Escapes by Jumping Into Alewife Brook

A tool thief eluded his pursuer in West Somerville today when, fully clad, he dove into Alewife Brook on the Arlington side and swam across to West Somerville. Daniel Doyle of Pine street, Belmont, told police he was at work on the Arlington side of Alewife Brook, where some new houses are in process of construction, when he came upon a man in the act of stealing a box of tools.

Doyle gave chase and the man dropped the tools and dove into the brook, swimming to the Somerville side.

BETTY ALDEN'S COMMENT ON SOCIETY EVENTS

Gaily Attired Matrons and Maids Find Outer Wraps Not Amiss at Beck Hall Class Day Festivities

ACCORDING TO THE CALENDAR IT IS, OF COURSE, June. Nevertheless at the Beck Hall tea, social climax of Harvard's Class Day festivities, wraps of fur and rich brocades came not amiss to finish off a gossamer Class Day creation of lace or tulle. They were exactly the thing to ward off whatever vagrant breezes blew across the Beck Hall enclosure as the Fashionables supped and danced as the guests of Porcellian Club men.

SOMETIMES THE WRAP PROVED TO BE A MERE NOTHING, OF thistledown texture. Such, for instance, as Miss Helen Rust's coat of pleated lace or Miss Elizabeth Lyman's flowered crepe wrap banded in ostrich. Or, perhaps the wrap was really substantial, such as those of Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell and her daughters, Miss Ellen and Miss Hannah; or Mrs. George Richmond Fearing's horizon blue coat, or the green velvet and gilt lace cape that Mrs. David Sears wore. Whatever the selection, it was at once a necessity and a costume accessory distinctly fitting the occasion.

MISS HELEN RUST, WHO WAS IN THE J. DUDLEY CLARK, JR., supper group, was delightfully costumed in blue, her frock and her pleated cape both of lace and exactly matched the tint of her wide hat. Miss Elizabeth Lyman's unusual costume took its distinctive note from the long transparent wrap of crepe and ostrich that touched its wearer's heels and entirely covered her champagne yellow frock.

MISS CORNELIA CLARK, SISTER OF J. DUDLEY CLARK, JR., was at her brother's Class Day celebration in a fetching frock of yellow and a wide black hat. So far as Class Day and Beck Hall Tea were concerned, the wide chapeau that literally swept the shoulders was prime favorite. Even though for dancing it had to be turned up in front, much as pirates were supposed to have worn their dashing headgear. Miss Virginia Ayres found it necessary to turn back the brim of her large beige straw as she danced, and so did Miss Mary Hammond.

THE HAROLD JEFFERSON COOLIDGE FAMILY WAS MUCH IN evidence, all in honor of the graduation of the Coolidge sons, Harold Jefferson, Jr., and Lawrence Coolidge. Mrs. Coolidge was smartly turned out in flowered chiffon with a cape effect of tan, and hat of dark brown. Miss Emily Coolidge was in mais e muslin, all ruffled, and her hat was a scoop affair of black. Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge and Miss Emily are but just off the steamer from Europe, coming home only yesterday in time for Class Day.

YOUNG ROBERT HAYDOCK HALLOWELL, A 1927 MAN, entertained his family group. His mother, Mrs. Robert Hallowell, wore orchid chiffon and a matching hat, and Miss Rebecca, the pretty daughter, was in a frock of pink and white mull in the quaint flechu fashion. Mrs. James Jackson was in petunia chiffon, both hat and frock of the striking shade, and she, too, sported the very popular cape effect that graced so many costumes at Beck.

THE S. HUNTINGTON WOLCOTT FAMILY, IN ITS FEMININE element, made attractive Class Day figures. Mrs. Wolcott's frock and wrap were of black and white crepe and Miss Edith Wolcott finished off an all white silk frock with an enormous white hat. Miss Helen Lovering and Mrs. J. Hampden Rob[illegible] might have been twins, so far as their frocks were concerned. [illegible] wore pink muslin, both had blue sashes and both were topped [illegible]eghorn hats.

MRS. DAVID SEARS TOOK O[illegible] A GREEN VELVET WRAP TO dance in a chiffon frock [illegible] deep orchid. Mrs. George Fearing's horizon blue broadcloth coat was doffed for dancing to disclose a sky blue flowered chiffon. Her hat was of blue, and banded in rose color. Young Mrs. Fearing is always charmingly frocked and hatted, and never more so than for the Beck Tea. Miss Emelie Winslow added her special charm to the ensemble. Miss Winslow's frock was a flowered chiffon and her hat of leaf green.

MISS PEGGY PORTER'S WRAP AND FROCK BOTH HAD AN Oriental touch of scarlet in their make up. Mrs. Chester Ward well wore a dahlia red chiffon and Miss Louise James, who had Mrs. Charles Shepard in her group, wore a Mandarin coat over a green silk frock. Miss Margery Richardson wore a flowered chiffon picturesquely designed. She and her chosen intimate, Miss Rosamond Borland, came in together. Mrs. F. L. W. Richardson, attractive mater of the pretty Miss Margery, wore a leghorn hat and silk wrap over a chiffon gown. Mrs. Edwin Sibley Webster was in soft golden beige, and Mrs. Richard M. Saltonstall in brown lace.

GEORGE HIGGINSON, 2d, ENTERTAINED, AND MRS. FRANCIS LEE HIGGINSON, in black and white, and Mrs. George Lyman, Jr. (Eleanor Higginson), were in the family group. Mrs. Lyman wore a printed silk in rose tones and a beige straw hat. Miss Harriet Royce and Mr. Theopold, her fiance, made a stunning couple. The handsome Miss Royce was in green with a frock of green silk. Miss Jean Sears wore the selfsame frock of hydrangea blue chiffon and matching hat that was a bridesmaid frock for the Honora Mason-John Winston wedding a month or so ago.

MISS ELOISE LAWRENCE DANCED IN A SPORTS FROCK OF pleated silk, a pale rose banded in blue, and Miss Mary Otis wore much the same sort of costume, a smart little affair of white and King's blue, with blue and white repeated in her hat. Miss Alice Lince wore a printed silk; Miss Laura Taylor a white silk frock, and hat and shoes of blue. Miss Ella deT. Snelling was in beige. Mrs. William DeFord Beal's very good looking Class Day costume was a lettuce green frock with a wide tan straw hat and taupe fox scarf. Mrs. Beal is a handsome young matron who always dresses her type to perfection.

MRS. AUGUSTUS F. GOODWIN'S CHIFFON FROCK HAD touches of fur in its smart outline, and Miss Frances Goodwin wore a bright tinted crepe and black hat. Miss Betty Moulton's wide hat and her beige frock were of matching tones. Of the senior element content to look on at the dancing there were Dr. and Mrs. Charles J White, Mrs. White in a black lace costume, and Mrs. Henry DuBois Tudor and her mother, Mrs. John Chipman Gray. Mrs. Tudor's hand some costume was of violet silk and velvet. Mrs. J. Lewis Bremer was in gossamer black lace over flowered chiffon and Mrs. Hallam Movius was in gray crepe.

Snappy Titles the Thing in American Movies

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

LOS ANGELES, June 22.—Picture postcards received from Laura La Plante and her director-husband, William Seiter, from Honolulu, indicate that the Seiters are having a gorgeous time. But, vacations like all good things, must end and so in another week the Seiters will return to Hollywood and the movies.

Laura will star in "Thanks For the Buggy Ride," and her husband will direct "Good Morning Judge," an original story by Phillip Hurn and Peter Milne.

These two jazzy names convince me more than ever that good titles are the thing. Just cast your eye on "Good Morning Judge" and "Thanks For the Buggy Ride." Wouldn't you be apt to go and see pictures with names like that? I think so. If you enjoy comedy.

Universal, I am told, has some ambitious plans for the blonde Miss La Plante. "Finders Keepers," by Mary Roberts, is included in those plans and will follow "Thanks for the Buggy Ride." Wesley Ruggles will probably direct her. Still, it's rather early to make them tell.

I AM willing to wager my large fortune that "Across the Atlantic," written for Monte Blue, is a story of a movie Lindbergh. Warners are sagey. They wont admit the nature of the picture, but they do say that it will follow "One-Round Hogan" and will have Roy Del Ruth as the director and Leila Hyams as leading lady.

Bebe Daniels has already announced that she is going to do "Sky High," the story of a female Lindbergh, so I shall be greatly surprised if Warners do not get in their work with Monte.

If I were a producer and had a Lindbergh idea, I wouldn't let any grass grow under my feet. There is going to be a lot of these pictures and the first ones made will be the successful ones.

CIRCUS TRAIN IN CRASH ON NEW HAVEN

Willimantic, Conn., June 22 (I.N.S.).—Barnum and Bailey's Ringling Brothers Circus, enroute from Providence to Hartford, was delayed here for six hours today when the first section of the train crashed into the rear of a Providence freight train on the line of the New Haven Railroad, near South Windham station.

Neither the circus folks nor the crew of the train were injured.

The caboose on the freight train was completely destroyed by fire after the collision. An oil tank car, just ahead of the caboose, was derailed.

The other four sections of the circus train were rerouted via New London.

POLICE TO STOP ANY DE VALERA OUTBURST

Dublin, June 22 (A.P.).—Dublin's police force today completed arrangements to prevent the public demonstration by the Fianna Fail, Eamon De Valera's party, from interfering with the proceedings surrounding the opening of the Dail Eireann tomorrow.

The demonstration is aimed against the oath of allegiance to the King, which all Dail deputies are required to take and which the Fianna Fail refuses.

Crowds will be prohibited from assembling in the streets in the vicinity of parliament house. Before getting into the courtyard, deputies and newspapermen must be identified.

Mr. De Valera and the members of his party will, like the other elected deputies, be able to pass the gateway, but will not be admitted to the House without taking the oath of allegiance. This they will refuse to do.

It is anticipated that Mr. De Valera later will address an open-air demonstration of his followers.

HUB FRIEND OF LEAGUE TO GET U. S. POST

By JAMES T. WILLIAMS, JR., Editor of Universal Service.

Washington, June 22.—All Americans who helped to keep the United States out of the League of Nations and its private court, will be surprised to hear that the next assistant Secretary of State to be appointed may be Roland W. Boyden, a distinguished lawyer of Boston, who was one of the most argent advocates between the two oceans of American membership in the League and the League Court.

Promotion of Assistant Secretary Olds to be Under Secretary of State in succession to Mr. Frew, who goes as Ambassador to Turkey, created the vacancy loc which Mr. Boyden has been urged.

The extraordinary aspect of Boyden's appointment as one of the chief assistants to the Secretary of State would be the fact of his past prominence in the countrywide movement to involve the United States in the League and its several auxiliaries.

SOP TO LEAGUE SUPPORTERS.

In support of Mr. Boyden as Assistant Secretary of State it is argued by advocates of his appointment that the member nations of the league would view his entrance into the Department of State as evidence of a welcome change of heart on the part of the Coolidge administration toward the leadership of the league in world affairs.

That many Republican supporters of the League and the League Court who are still disgruntled over President Coolidge's failure to keep up his fight for American membership in the court would be reconciled to the status quo, and last but not least that unless some such "balm darling" as Mr. Boyden's appointment is soon handed out the League Republicans in Massachusetts will make it hard on Mr. Butler to be returned to the senate next year in case he decides to make a second attempt to defeat Senator Walsh.

WELL THOUGHT OF.

The belief is growing here that the selection of the next Assistant Secretary of State will be left to Secretary Kellogg, that he will consult his predecessor Mr. Hughes, and possibly his colleague, Secretary Hoover.

Both Mr. Hughes and Mr. Hoover are said to think very highly of Mr. Boyden's abilities. In the event that Secretary Kellogg's health should not hold out Mr. Boyden as Assistant Secretary of State would undoubtedly be urged as his successor at the head of the department. That would give the conduct of foreign relations into the immediate charge of a firm believer in the League of Nations and its private court.

LINDBERGH'S DEEP LOVE FOR HIS PARENTS

MY PLANE AND I—
From the Lips of Lindy Himself

CHAPTER III.
By WILLIAM HILLMAN
Copyright, 1927, King Features Synd. Inc.

If you had seen Lindbergh standing at dawn on the bridge of the cruiser Memphis, his tall, slim form erect and straight, his clear blue eyes looking over the sea, his relentless blond hair flowing in the wind, you might have caught for one nebulous moment a picture of the legendary heroes of the North.

Viking dreams and Viking ambitions stir in him. And Viking blood in part, flows through his veins.

If you were to ask him about it Lindbergh would admit the rich heritage of Northern ancestry, but he would as quickly remind you:

"I am an American."

It would be his simple way of saying that whatever may have been the currents of racial destiny that joined to create alms, his dreams and his work dwell on American soil.

"My father was born in Sweden. He came to America when a baby. He was brought over by my grandfather, Augustus Lindbergh. A Swedish army officer and former member of the Swedish Parliament.

Lindy told me for the first time that his grandfather came to this country as a member of a Swedish military mission.

"He came with Colonel Matteson, a Swedish army officer, to study American army methods.

"That was in the eighteen fifties or sixties. I do not remember exactly. It was in 1860. Grandfather came to love America so well he decided to stay.

MOTHER ENGLISH

"My mother was born in Detroit. She is the daughter of Dr. C. H. Land, a dentist. She is of English extraction. There is Irish blood in her veins, too, and French blood. My mother's first name, vangeline, is due to French influence.

"I was born in Detroit, but the family moved from there when I was only a year old. I have lived in Little Falls, Minnesota, part of the time, and in Washington, D. C. I call St. Louis my home, but since I took up flying I have moved all over the country, spending considerable time in California.

"I know only a few words of Swedish. I speak no other language but AMERICAN.

"Whatever my ancestry, I am AMERICAN."

It is from his father that he got his determined, independent character, more so than from his mother, who is a remarkably independent woman.

FATHER INSURGENT

Lindbergh's father was an insurgent. He was a Westerner, with the heart of a lion, who attacked where he thought he saw injustice and oppression.

Lindy saw the deep depression settle down on his father when the elder Lindbergh was defeated for Congress and the attacks on his enemies grew violent. He saw the deep anger, the silent hurt of his father as he went back to his Minnesota farm.

How significant then the estimate of his father, which Lindy let fall from his lips accidentally: "My father took orders from no man."

He refused to issue statements concerning his plans or impressions.

"I will issue no statement. It would sound artificial coming from me."

Newspapermen trying to put flowery language into any of his answers to their questions would be warned:

"I don't talk like that. Don't you make me say anything but it the way I say it. People who know me would know that it wasn't I who spoke that way."

Whenever Lindbergh spoke to anyone of his life and his experiences he talked of his mother.

One of the first questions asked him by King Albert of Belgium was about his mother.

"MY MOTHER"

The kindly interest of his heroling stirred Lindbergh. He said:

"My mother is a chemistry teacher."

It was his tribute to his mother, his way of saying:

"My mother is no ordinary woman dependent upon man or having no interest in life outside of the home."

Mrs. Lindbergh got her interest in science from her childhood surroundings. Her father was more than a mere dental practitioner. He was an inventor, who perfected a process of using porcelain for filling teeth and a system of gold inlaying.

Lindy found his own inventive, mechanically inclined genius exercised by the machinery in his grandfather's office.

Dr. Land, his maternal grandfather, was born in Ontario, Canada, but spent his boyhood and received his education in Brooklyn. He finally established himself in Detroit after a short practice in Chicago.

Dr. Land's family originally came from Suffolk, England. There is a strong Irish strain in the family, and one of the predecessors, according to Lindy, came from France.

THIRD ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP BOXER'S HOME

Providence, June 22 (A.P.)—For the third time within a month an effort was made last night to blow up the premises of Sterrie Billingkoff, better known in sporting circles as "Young Montreal," professional boxer.

Gun powder ignited under the piazza of the home of William J. Shaw at No. 12 Doyle avenue, where Montreal has made his home since his mother died about a month and a half ago, did considerable damage to the front of the building, caused a convalescent girl on the third floor veranda to faint and sent a bit of wreckage to strike another woman who was escorting a 79 year-old companion along the sidewalk in front of the house.

Three weeks ago an incendiary fire broke out in the pool room conducted by Montreal in the basement of the Crown Hotel. Investigating authorities found dynamite in the pool room after the blaze had been extinguished.

About two weeks ago Montreal's car home at No. 15 Doyle avenue, next door to the Shaw dwelling, was dynamited. Considerable liquor was seized and Montreal with his brother, was charged with violation of the prohibition laws.

INDIANS TO HUNT FOR NUNGESSER AND COLI

New York, June 23 (A.P.)—The Nungesser-Coli search expedition monoplane Jeanne d'Arc was being overhauled at Port Blandford, N. F., today while Major F. Sidney Cotton, commander, arranged for employment of an Indian guide to aid in continuation of the hunt for the missing French fliers.

Chicoutimi, Que., June 22 (A.P.)—Ten thousand handbills have been prepared for distribution from an airplane over the Saguenay River area in the hope that one of them may fall into the hands of Nungesser and Coli, missing French pilots.

3 TEXAS JAIL-BREAKERS CAUGHT; 32 STILL FREE

Huntsville, Tex., June 22 (A.P.)—Three of 35 prisoners who escaped from the Ferguson State Prison farm here today were captured few hours later, and posses, led by bloodhounds, are trailing the others through the wooded and muddy flats into which they fled.

The escape, the second within ten days, was effected by sawing a hole in the floor of the wooden barracks in which they were quartered.

20,000 QUARTS OF ALE SEIZED IN HAY CARS

St. Albans, Vt., June 22 (A.P.)—Approximately 20,000 quart bottles of Canadian ale were seized at Newport in two freight cars this morning, customs headquarters here was advised.

The ale was concealed in a hay shipment which was consigned to the Matheson Vail Company of Lowell, from E. F. Liggot of St. Phillipe, Quebec.

TWO ARMED MEN ROB CONNECTICUT BANK

Southington, Ct., June 22 (A.P.)—Two armed men this afternoon held up and robbed the Plantsville National Bank, escaping in an automobile with a sum of money, estimated at $2,000 by Raymond C. Olsen, cashier, who, with his wife, was alone in the bank at the time.

CITY NURSES, FACING SUSPENSION, YIELD

The possible suspension of nearly a score of city health department nurses for refusing to appear in Summer uniforms, purchased with their own money, vanished today when Health Commissioner Mahoney announced all of the 105 nurses had provided themselves with the necessary garments.

SAYS SHE CALLS EX-BELLHOP 'FUNNY FACE'

"Funny Face" as a pet name and running her fingers caressingly through his hair, were some of the tokens of affection Mrs. Marie Evelyn Sherman Lederman displayed toward her husband, Hyman L. Lederman, 26-year-old former bellboy, whose wife is suing him for a divorce in Middlesex Probate Court. Lederman is contesting the divorce.

It was Miss Rose Lederman, sister of the ex-bell-hop, who testified that the young wife exhibited these signs of love in her presence, seeking to disprove the young wife's statement that she and her husband never got along well together.

Lederman, who was brought from the Concord reformatory where he is serving a term, to testify, claimed some time ago to have been promised $300,000 by Mrs. Theodore N. Vail, wealthy widow of the late head of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company. The money was to have been given him because of kindness shown Mrs. Vail, he claimed.

Miss Lederman testified that when she visited the couple they were perfectly happy.

Lederman, himself on the stand and smilingly answered "Yes" when asked if his home was at Concord.

He said he told his mother-in-law that he expected an inheritance of $300,00, but added that the newspaper exaggerated and he didn't know just how it would be.

Lederman admitted that he quarreled with his mother-in-law on occasions, but he denied ever pushing his wife down stairs or ever striking her.

STATE SURVEY OF CROSSINGS ORDERED

As a direct result of the campaign waged by the Boston Evening American for better protection for the public at railroad grade crossings, a State-wide survey has been ordered by the Public Utilities Commission.

The survey was decided upon at a conference behind closed doors at the State House, lasting an hour and a half, between the five commissioners and Public Works Commissioner William F. Williams and Associate Commissioner Frank E. Lyman. It is to be undertaken at once.

Crossings with gates will be checked as to the number of hours each is operated by the gateman. The commission particularly is anxious to find out what provisions are being made to guard the public from extra and freight trains after the flag and gateman have gone off duty.

Those crossings which have no human signalmen will be rabulated, attention being paid to the automatic devices installed, if any.

Following the survey, it was given out, there will be another conference at which it will be decided what additional devices should be installed.

Commissioner Williams declared that he was primarily interested in more safety devices to take care of the ever increasing amount of auto traffic.

To the Commission he reaffirmed his willingness to use State funds in meeting the railroads half way by erecting blinkers and additional warning signs on the highways. What he does not spend, he declared, will depend on what the roads will do in co-operation, or what they are ordered to do by the Commission which has jurisdiction over them.

Asked at the end of the conference if he was satisfied over the preliminary discussion, Williams said:

"Yes, I am entirely satisfied. The survey will tell the story."

125 STRIKE IN COTTON MILL AT WALTHAM

A strike of 125 employes of the Boston Manufacturing Company at Waltham, makers of cotton sheeting, was declared today when officials of the company announced a reduction in the pay for piecework.

A few weeks ago the looms of the factory were equipped with an attachment to speed up the manufacture of sheetings and with the installation officials announced a reduction in the wage scale from $12.62 per 100,000 picks to a scale of $9.47. They argued that with the increased production there would be no decrease in the size of the pieces workers' average pay envelope.

The striking workers claim the machine is a failure and they lose $7 to $10 a week.

U. S. ADMIRAL FIGHTS BRITISH 'CRUISER' PLAN

By HARRY R. FLORY,
International News Service Correspondent

Geneva, June 22.—Spirited debate occurred today at the meeting of the experts' committee of the Tripartite Naval Disarmament Conference over conversion of merchant ships into auxiliary cruisers.

Sir Frederick Field, British expert ridiculed the idea that British merchant vessels could be so converted.

"A merchant liner equipped with 6-inch guns can be made more dangerous than a cruiser," interjected Admiral Hilary P. Jones, U. S. N.

"Cruisers below a certain tonnage have armor plate just as fragile as the eggshell hull of a liner.

"When you start reducing the tonnage of cruisers you rapidly reduce the thickness of their armor plate."

Replying to the British proposal, that each nation state its own naval needs, Admiral Jones declared: "Naval strengthens relative, not absolute, in quality."

There is only one rule for the contest: Just the sending of a photograph of the entrant's feet, either full length or knee length, to the Contest Editor with the name legibly written on the reverse of the picture.

SAVES MAN IN SUICIDE TRY

Victor Staffieri, thirty-nine, of Bennington street, East Boston, made two unsuccessful attempts to end his life in Maverick square, East Boston, today, according to police.

He first hurled himself in the path of a street car and then tried to shoot himself with the revolver of a patrolman, who grappled with him following his first attempt.

With his three-year-old daughter, Angelina, in his arms, Staffieri walked to Maverick square and stood before the tunnel entrance, and as a car came out hurled himself in its path, the child still in his arms. The motorman stopped the trolley just as it struck the man. Patrolman John Crawford witnessed Staffieri's act and grappled with him. During the melee the demented man succeeded in grasping the officer's revolver and raising it to his forehead fired one shot, which went wild.

Patrolman Joseph Mahan aided his brother officer in subduing the man.

Curlee Hands by Oliver Sandys

AUCTION BRIDGE

The World's Greatest Authority

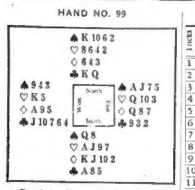
BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

A HOME PAPER FOR THE PEOPLE WHO THINK

SECOND SECTION

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1927

HAND NO. 99



South is the dealer. What is the proper bidding and play?

In the next issue Mr. Whitehead will explain the salient points in the bidding and play of the above hand. Fill out your own chart and compare it with his method.

These hands must not be bid or played "Double Dummy," i.e., as though all four hands were exposed.

Yesterday's Hand as Played by Mr. Whitehead

Salient Points of the Bidding

Following West's double of South's No Trump, it is a close question whether North should or should not bid his Diamond suit. While as good as an original Diamond bid, the rule is to show such suit in this position. And with a six-card Q J 10 x, K J or Q J suit, North should bid it over the double and rebid it if necessary. North's actual bidding is between these two, as he quite properly passes.

East's only possible response to West's double is his weak Club suit. This bid passing around to North, North now bids his Diamonds. South reasting this bid as not in the nature of a rescue, bids two No Trumps.

Salient Points of the Play

Trick 2. East holds off to provide for the possibility of South's holding only two Diamonds.

Trick 11. South must either unguard the King of Spades or discard the Queen of Hearts, making Dummy's Heart good.

Mr. Whitehead will answer questions concerning your Bridge problems. Write to him care of this paper, enclosing self-addressed stamped envelope.

LITA SPURNS PEACE DEAL

Woman Burglar Admits Crimes

CHAPLIN FIGHT TO PROCEED

Wife Rejects Offer of Settlement at the "Price of Perjury"

Los Angeles, June 22 (A.P.).—Announcing the definite failure of all efforts to settle the Chaplin divorce-alimony suit out of court, attorneys for Lita Grey Chaplin declared today they were concentrating on preparations for the trial of the case.

Peace negotiations were reported definitely under way two weeks ago. They have ended definitely, Lyndal Young and Edwin McHenry, Mrs. Chaplin's attorneys announced, because neither they nor their client "desire a settlement, no matter how large, at the price of perjury."

The statement of the attorneys was made at the time they said, to an announcement to the press in New York by Nathan Burkan, personal representative of Charlie Chaplin. Burkan was quoted as saying the film comedian would never settle with his wife until she issued a public statement saying the charges regarding his moral conduct were untrue. Otherwise, Burkan was quoted as declaring, Chaplin would "fight and fight" to remove the stain upon his children and himself.

The McMurray-Young statement said:

"Lloyd Wright and Gavin McNab, Mr. Chaplin's attorneys of record, have for several weeks endeavored to bring about a settlement of their client's difficulties. They submitted a definite proposal to Mrs. Chaplin, and we had indicated it would receive serious consideration. Both the attorneys give assurance it was authorized by Mr. Chaplin, and a number of conferences looking toward a settlement were conducted.

"In the midst of these Mr. Burkan at New York issued a statement that Chaplin would not settle unless Mrs. Chaplin stated publicly that the charges in her complaint involving her husband's moral conduct were false.

"Mr. Burkan demands in effect that she declare publicly she has committed perjury. She will never repudiate the grave charges because they are true. She does not desire a settlement, no matter how large, at the price of perjury. The sum of money offered her is very large, but she is not selling her integrity or veracity. She is simply asking for her rights under the law and she will seek them in court.

"On one hand Mr. Burkan says the charges are false, and on the other he offers to pay to have them retracted."

Trial of the case has been set for Aug. 22. Mrs. Chaplin declares her husband is worth about $16,000,000 and has an income of more than $500,000 a year. She demands her share of the community property, which she estimates at about $10,000,000.

His name on the records is Joseph Abantino and his age thirty-five. Josephine, whose real first name is Freida, is down as twenty-one.

Tells of Robberies Around Keene, and the Police Find Piles of Loot in Barn

Keene, N. H., June 22. (I.N.S.).—While James Steele, believed to be a nationally sought burglar, today remained in a serious condition in a local hospital, where he was brought protesting his innocence, after being shot by county police, his alleged wife, Catherine Dodge, admitted extensive marauding expeditions through the district.

Both Steele and Miss Dodge, who had been living here together as Mr. and Mrs. Milton K. Dodge, are former residents of Dundee, N. Y., and Detroit, according to the woman's testimony.

Loot from Summer homes was found piled high in the barn of the West Swanzey house they had been occupying. Including $2,000 worth of recently stolen antiques.

Miss Dodge, who stagg ed to the home of a neighbor, weak from the loss of blood, claimed she and her "husband" had been attacked by three gunmen, and a police search was begun for the "bandits."

In the meantime, county police officials had apprehended Steele, hiding in a West Shaftsbury, Vt., farmhouse, and carried him, wounded in the neck and left breast, to the hospital.

When the woman went to the hospital, and faced the county police, she broke down and admitted she and Steele were burglars.

"Tux" Is a Nice Dog When He's Near His Master

"Tux," a spaniel from Reading, may be a real nice dog at home, but according to Judge Duff in Municipal Court today he can't be so good when he gets away.

It seems "Tux" was in his master's car when it was arked in Tufts street. His master is W. K. Chase of North Reading. Dave Barroso, a leather merchant, was passing and was bitten in the arm. Chase pleaded not guilty to keeping a biting dog.

"Tux" came into court and took the witness stand with Mrs. Chase, his mistress, and looked his meekest at Judge Duff. Chase was fined $5. "There seems little doubt that 'Tux' is a nicely behaved dog at home," he said, "but when he comes into Boston he doesn't seem to behave so well," Chase paid.

Story of Love and Intrigue; a Girl Who Kept Her Head and a Tiger Woman

Lady Meldreth is fascinated by Eddie Wisden, a romantic figure in Pinaud's tea dance resort. Eddie has high hopes of marrying the great lady, and thereby solving his social and financial problems, as soon as she divorces her sporting husband, Lord Meldreth. The money situation in the Wisden home, which is ruled by a grasping mother, becomes exceedingly stringent, especially after Jill, Eddie's popular half-sister, loses her place with a road show. Jill is an idealist and her high standards make her brother rather ashamed of his own scheming conduct. Jill, miles from London, is in grave financial difficulties. Far out on a country road she is overcome by a terrific storm, and seeks refuge in a shack where she faints from fatigue, and is later discovered by Lord Meldreth, whose shooting camp happens to be nearby.

Jill, revived, jokes with her rescuer and Lord Meldreth envisions a pleasant day with the lovely young actress.

CHAPTER VIII.

JILL came in a few minutes later looking fresh.

"Can I make myself useful?" she asked.

"Well, yes, you can," Meldreth answered. "My servant turned up, and I told him to light the fire and lay breakfast and then clear out. I thought you might find his presence a nuisance. That leaves us our own eggs to boil."

Jill looked round. "Breakfast will be ready when you are."

Jill called blithely when breakfast was ready.

She seemed as much at ease as the chatelaine of any ordinary house at a family breakfast table.

Jill handed him a cup of coffee. "I learnt how to make good coffee in France, in the war," she added. Otherwise you don't get the real flavor. I learnt a lot of useful things out there."

"So you were in France?" Meldreth asked.

She nodded.

"Nearly all the time. I ran a little soup kitchen and First Aid station of my own behind the lines. The authorities let me, and I loved it."

"It must have been rather dangerous."

"One didn't think of that then. Sometimes I had so many to look after that I was like the old woman in a shoe. Men are like children; you know, especially when they're hurt."

"And were you all alone?"

"A good deal of the time. Why? The dear Dominies always behaved beautifully; only a very few of the officers—weren't gentlemen. I loved doing my bit."

The fact that she must have come a somewhat remarkable bit under the circumstances—Jill always omitted to mention that she had been decorated by two Royalties for her services—accounted for her half-fellow-well-met manner now quite as much as the rough and tumble of her stage life and associations.

Meldreth smiled hospitably across the table.

"It's awfully nice to have you here," he said. "The funny thing is, it doesn't seem in the least unusual."

Jill nodded.

"Things don't, if you take them naturally," she replied. "It seems perfectly ordinary for me to be here, I know; but tomorrow it will seem perfectly extraordinary that I ever was."

Meldreth frowned slightly.

"Don't talk about tomorrow yet," he said. "It's too soon. I'm so glad you haven't caught a cold. You haven't, have you?"

She shook her head.

"Not even the snuffles, thank you.

With his ribs crushed in and with other injuries evident, an unconscious man, unidentified, was found early today in the alley at the rear of the Adams House. Although living when carried up and started to the Relief Hospital the stranger was dead on arrival at Haymarket square.

The dead man was about 60 years old, 5 feet, 7 inches tall, weighed 135 pounds, was of medium complexion, smooth face, had gray hair and wore a blue suit, Panama hat, blue and white shirt, white collar and black shoes and stockings.

Included in the liquor treasure were 10 gallon kegs of fine old rum, Scotch whiskey of high grade and pure alcohol in cans.

The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe — By Daniel Defoe

The years passed and Crusoe lived peacefully on his island home. But he had only his dog and parrot for friends and he longed constantly for the joys of human companionship. He built a boat, meaning to leave the island, but when he finished it he saw it was too big to move.

One day, after he had been on the island many years, he visited a part of the beach that had not attracted his attention before. There he was astonished to see the imprint of a man's naked foot on the sand. He was terrified, for he believed that other islands nearby were inhabited by cannibals.

Later on, the cannibals visited the same part of the island once more. They brought a prisoner with them, whom they devoured. Crusoe watched the proceeding helplessly from a secluded spot among the trees. He was armed and he wanted to try to save the prisoner, but the cannibals were too many for him.

During this year a ship was wrecked off his island, but no one, so far as he knew, reached the shore in safety. After the storm passed he visited the ship, but found only a dog, almost dead from hunger. He took it ashore along with some money and supplies.

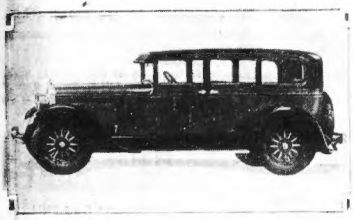
MID-WEEK MOTOR NEWS

By J. HERBERT DODGE, Automobile Editor

'ARMCHAIR COMFORT'



DODGE SENIOR SIX

This new Dodge Brothers machine has actual speed in excess of sixty miles an hour and is built for comfort.

NEW DODGE IS SPEEDY CAR

RUMBLE SEAT IN HUDSON

"Armchair comfort" and actual speeds in excess of 60 miles an hour are two hitherto irreconcilable factors that Nixan Bates Pope, technical editor, discovers among the noteworthy new features of Dodge Brothers senior six.

It may be said at once that without being extreme in any sense Dodge Brothers six has plenty of snap in its performance. Mr. Pope, hits it off well when he says in Automobile Topics: "Dodge Brothers senior is a distinctive embodiment of the spirit of the time.

"Its size is rendered indefinite by the gently rounded contours of the roof line which is crowned and moulded over the sides to produce the effect of length and lowness. Actually it stands a fraction over 71 inches from the ground, but it looks considerably lower.

"An entirely new interpretation of the moulding line is created by the use of recessed panels on the doors and swinging around the back from one rear quarter to that on the other side. The entire front of the car is distinctively new. The radiator is deep, rather high and surrounded by barely more than a rim of the polished shell which is of uniform width, save at the top where it widens out. The butterfly sweep of the guards is effective, the lines of the hood rugged and strong."

OVERLAND SHIPMENTS LARGEST IN MAY

"May was the largest month in the history of Willys-Overland," according to Pres. John N. Willys. "Shipments for the month were 58,548 cars having a value of approximately $23,000,000. Exact figures on retail sales for the month are not yet available but it is safe to estimate that they undoubtedly exceed the shipments.

"The report of dealer stocks for the week ending May 28 showed a 10 per cent. further reduction than the week preceding. This action, clearing off all development and engineering expenses which are gradually reduced final profits last year, which practice continues to be followed strictly this year, the company is now reaping the advantage in lower costs which permit of low prices, large production and consequently enlarged profits."

PROPERTY OWNERS TO SHARE STREET COST

Property owners on seven streets in West Roxbury, Dorchester, Hyde Park and Brighton today appeared before the board of street commissioners at City Hall and agreed to share in the expense of laying permanent pavements constructed, $50,000.

The most extensive of the streets agreed upon were Wilson, West Roxbury, between Weld and Dunbar streets, and Canton, Hyde Park, from River to Hollingsworth streets, where extensive grade changes will have to be made at a cost of $26,000.

QUINCY MAN FINED $10 FOR ATTACKING LAWYER

John P. MacKay, 73, of Quincy, now under indictment for assaulting himself on a lawyer in the courthouse, was fined $10 today in Judge Murray's Municipal Court for assaulting M. J. Kelly of Quincy. The alleged assault is an aftermath of the action of the Settlement against MacKay. Kelly, according to the testimony, was the principal witness against MacKay before the grand jury.

COMERVILLE OFFICER COUNSEL FOR BROTHER

Lowell, June 22 (A.P.)—George E. Estes, Somerville police officer, appeared as defense counsel for his brother, Paul N. Estes, of Bartlett street, Somerville, who appealed fines totaling $50 on disorderly here today, on complaints of failure to keep to the right of a traveled way, and failure to stop on signal of an officer.

He was held in $200 bonds for trial in Superior court.

BOYS TIP HEADSTONES IN MILTON CEMETERY

Thirty headstones in the Milton Cemetery were tipped over by vandals early today. Persons walking by the cemetery noticed many stones on their sides and notified the police. Chief Travers believes that boys in an automobile drove through the cemetery avenues during the night, knocking over the stones.

The latest addition to the Hudson line is an attractive two-passenger car with rumble seat. This car has recently been received by Hudson dealers in this section and it is meeting with popular favor among the roadster devotees, declares C. G. Abbott, general manager of the Hudson Motor Car Company, Hudson distributors.

The body is finished in a deep burgundy red with black running gear and genuine leather upholstery to match. One particular feature about the car that makes a strong appeal is the arrangement for opening the rumble seat compartment. The mechanism which controls this piece of this compartment is operated from the driver's seat, so that it is not necessary for the driver to leave his position if he wishes to open the rumble seat.

"This popular demand for a roadster like the Hudson," said Mr. Abbott, "has resulted on the production of this new model by the Hudson Motor Car Company."

BUYERS TODAY DESIRE FULLY EQUIPPED CAR

"The trend of automobile buyers to desire a fully equipped car is becoming more and more pronounced. What were only a few years ago recarded as luxurious accessories are today recognized by engineers as vital needs, and rightly so due to changed traffic and road conditions," said Harry Dunn, general manager of the Boston Oldsmobile Company.

"This recognition has been demonstrated in Oldsmobile with the recent announcement of lower prices. It also announced that hereafter all Oldsmobiles would be equipped with front and rear bumpers, rear vision mirrors and windshield cleaners. These are considered by Oldsmobile engineers to be vital necessities under present driving conditions.

"When the first Oldsmobiles were built nearly 30 years ago the only extra equipment, according to stories of old times, was a whip socket on the dash and first was there because the maker of the dashboards had always included a whip socket on his buggy dashes, and thought it would make them any different.

"During the intervening years improvement after improvement has been made and usually these come out first as accessories and later included as standard equipment. With the introduction of this equipment as standard on Oldsmobile it has been possible to increase at a price of less than $900 a six cylinder closed car with needed necessories included in the purchase price."

SAFETY FEATURES IN WILLYS-KNIGHT CARS

"The convenient arrangement of the lighting and horn controls on the steering wheel of all Willys-Knight models has won the approval of women drivers of the nation as well as men," according to Herbert Pitch, general manager for New England. "They declare, however, that this is merely one of the features of these Knights powered with silent, low speed, responsive motors that are making sales records.

"The wisdom of the system of controlling the lights and the horn from the steering wheel was adopted not only as a matter of convenience for the driver but as an added safeguard in traffic, according to the owner of the car to brighten or dim the lights or sound the horn without removing the hand from the steering wheel is necessary where the controls are located on the instrument panel."

ADMITS ERROR AND WINS GOV. FULLER

The council today unanimously confirmed the appointment made by Governor Fuller of W. W. Stanton of Fall River as member of the state board of embalmers.

In commenting on the objections of the Massachusetts Funeral Directors Association to the appointing of Staples on the ground that Staples had addressed personal communications to undertakers, Governor Fuller said:

"I am glad to appoint a man to office who admitted making a mistake. After having made it."

CHAMBERLIN DEFIED DAD TO RIDE AT FAIR; GOT SPANKING

By HOMER H. GRUENTHER

After Clarence was through high school he enrolled in Iowa State College at Ames, Iowa, where he took up electrical engineering.

As well as his parents or friends can remember, this was his first chance to become interested in motorcycles. Several of the students at Ames, who came from wealthy parents, had motorcycles, which in those days were considered "just the thing."

Clarence became friendly with one of the owners of these machines and often he did repair work on it and in turn he was allowed to use it occasionally.

After Clarence left college in 1914, he scraped up enough money to purchase a $65 second handed motorcycle.

This was the first motorcycle in Denison, and of course created quite a commotion. The townspeople always wanted a ride in "Chamberlin's new machine."

Later he purchased a second handed two cylinder machine, and so expert was he in handling machinery, and assembling parts, that he remade the motorcycle into a two cylinder automobile.

In all Clarence had five or six motorcycles, before he finally was graduated into the automobile own ers' class. He was forever tearing down the engines, and building them up again, always adding some new device.

Finally his parents forbade him to ride in the country fair races, any more, but Clarence changed his mind and entered them just the same.

His sister remembers, one time, when a carnival company came to town, and its racing motorcycle driver was ill. With no one to ride it the matedonne that night, Clarence was offered $25 to do the stunt.

Clarence had never seen a motordrome before, and knew nothing about riding a motorcycle in one, besides his parents had warned him that a sound thrashing was awaiting him if he ever rode at a fair or carnival again.

But that $25 looked too big to the young man so he took the chance.

He stationed a friend at the fair grounds gate, to watch so that his parents did not come into the show. Well, sure enough they were there.

That night, Clarence got one of the soundest "whippings" he ever got in his life.

To Be Continued.

Mrs. Mary E. Donovan of No. 30 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain, was awarded first prize of $250 in Boston Evening American's Rough Riders competition.

WOMAN WINS FIRST AWARD IN ROUGH RIDER' LETTERS

The first prize of $250 in the Boston Evening American's Rough Riders Contest has been awarded to Mrs. Mary E. Donovan of No. 30 Oakview terrace, Jamaica Plain.

Mrs. Donovan is the mother of two young children and for their sake is a veteran contest fan. "I'm planning on a college education for my boy and girl," she explained, "and never miss a chance to enter an American contest. I tried a long while before I got even a small prize, though I counted the fun of it well worth my effort. I call my prize money the children's Boston American Scholarship Fund."

"It was my love for Teddy Roosevelt that perhaps inspired my essay on the Rough Riders. I have always admired him strongly and found keen delight in the Rough Riders picture at the Fenway, so that my essay seemed so easy that I feared it had little chance."

Game called at 3:30 P. M.

In a desperate attempt to end the annual series with Yale at Soldiers Field this afternoon, Coach Fred Mitchell of Harvard intends to send Jack Barbee again to the mound.

Barbee was knocked out of the box in the first clash at New Haven, which the Crimson finally won, but Mitchell feels that the tall Chicagoan is his best bet to hand the Elis its second defeat in as many days and bring hostilities to a close.

Facing Barbee will be Dud Smith of Worcester, who was saved in the first game Cowville his winning rally when the Crimson batters staged in the wild seventh inning. Smith is a classy hurler and only needs fair support on the part of his teammates to give Barbee a real battle. Coach Mitchell stated today that Barbee, Ketchum, Howard and Cooley would warm up before the game and the choice made at the last minute. Barbee, however, is almost a certainty.

Coach Joe Wood of Yale could not explain the cracking of the Elis Eight errors in a championship Series was something unprecedented and Woods feels certain that his charges will be back in their true form at the Brighton diamond this afternoon.

Barbee starting at New Haven was wild and when he did groove 'em Blue batters hit 'em hard and far. Today, Mitchell feels that his ace will return to his best form.

The Crimson pastor intends to start pat on his lineup. He made a last-minute shift at New Haven, ranking Johnny Chase in favor of Bill Lord and intends to keep the latter in the left pasture. Donaghy will remain at short and Chauncey will be behind the plate.

Auto Speed Kings at Rockingham

With the arrival yesterday of little Pete DePaolo, Frank Lockhart and Harry Hartz, three of the world's greatest automobile speedsters, the Rockingham Speedway now houses the largest galaxy of racing stars ever assembled for a single meet.

Sixteen drivers, each with a large retinue of mechanics, substitute drivers and general assistants, are busily taking down and rebuilding their racing motors in a mad rush to be the first to make use of the mile and one-quarter of hard-rolled surface in preparation for the 200-mile championship race of Monday, July 4.

Stapp and Melchoir are making their initial bow to Rockingham.

CONWAY WILLING TO SELL PORTLAND CLUB

Portland, Me., June 22.—Joseph F. Conway, president of the Portland-New England League baseball club today said: "I will not start the Portland club in the second half of the New England League race unless I am guaranteed the financial backing in which the baseball committee failed me at the start of the first half. Recent receipt of a report from the drive shows me that but $3,175 of the $8,000 which was virtually promised me has been taken in. I do not feel that I can take another licking in Portland and am willing to listen to any or all propositions.

"If Portland wants the club locally owned, I am willing to step out in favor of Portland business men, giving them the best terms, and helping them in any way that it is within my power."

News From Old England

HAMPTON COURT, Eng., June 19 (A.P.)—Mickey Walker, American middleweight champion, who is to fight Tommy Milligan in London June 30 had an experience yesterday which pleased him—and a lot of people as well.

With his manager, Jack Kearns, Mickey was in a canoe on the Thames when he suddenly discovered a boatload of women and children across his bow. So he instantly overturned the canoe, dived in and swam ashore. He was cheered by the crowd who realized that Mickey's prompt action prevented a possible disaster.

The American middleweight was none the worse after a tub down, but Trainer Teddy Hayes won't let Mickey on the river again.

Varsity Boat Shows Superiority Over Second Crew in Trial Spin

Gales Ferry, Ct., June 22 (A. P.)—The Yale varsity and junior varsity crews rowed up stream together this morning. Coach Leader putting them through a series of racing starts. The varsity boat showed a little superiority all the way and on the return to quarters the second eight was forced to maintain a stroke of 35 to keep near the first eight stroking 34.

The combination crew which will race tomorrow afternoon and the freshman crew were to have a short workout this afternoon.

Valentine Chappell, regatta chairman, and W. A. Meiklejohn, referee were in camp today making arrangements for the correct laying out of the course. This afternoon they will take Yale and Harvard captains and coxswains down ten miles to ascertain if everything is all right for the race Friday. Later the captains will toss for lanes.

Harvard Crews Are Taken Over Three-Mile Course

Harvard's oarsmen were sent diagonally down stream from Red Top, Coach Ed Brown letting both varsity eights paddle in long stretches until the three-mile mark was reached. The senior crew then rowed at a low stroke up the course, while the second crew returned up stream in stretches. The combination and freshman crews held their practice close to the two mile flat.

Coach Bert Haines said that the freshman crew is improving every day, but has been handicapped by rough water. The yearlings made a snappy showing, but apparently lack the speed of last year's heavier crew.

SCHOOL NINES IN TITLE TILT

What is hailed as the best Cambridge Latin nine since the days of Frank McGrehan, Doc Campbell, Pete Cote and Sonny Foley is battling an aggressive Norwood High team at University Heights this afternoon in the third and deciding game of a series for the secondary championship of Greater Boston.

The first game of the series was won by Cambridge Latin at Braswell Field, North Cambridge, but Norwood came right back and evened the count in the contest played at Civic Field, Norwood. The third game appears to be a pretty even thing with the breaks likely to decide the issue.

Eddie Carney, the smooth working little Cambridge Latin southpaw is to hurl today. He will be opposed by Johnny Dixon, Dixon's big right-hander. These two pitchers opposed each other in the opening game of the series, Carney gaining the verdict when Savin, the Norwood first baseman, bowed one after turning in a brilliant duel's work.

GETTING THE INSIDE DOPE ON RUTH

BROTHER GILBERT GEORGE GRIMM

It was Brother Gilbert who first recognized the Babe's natural baseball ability and recommended him to Owner Jack Dunn of the Baltimore Orioles. He is shown here telling George Grimm, Boston Evening American sports writer, the real story of the Bambino's rise from obscurity to fame.

Ruth Came to Red Sox As Result of Baseball War

By GEORGE GRIMM.

The threatened new league caused baseball money to become scarce, especially in Baltimore. Even though the Orioles had won 13 games and lost none, Dunn found it hard to get enough money to keep in the running.

In desperation, Dunn turned to his friend Joe Lannin, then owner of the Red Sox. Joe lent Dunn $3,000. But this did not last long, and as a result, Dunn was forced to sell some of his stellar players.

He offered Lannin Ernie Shore and Babe Ruth, pitchers, and Ben Egan, catcher, for $19,500 and the cancellation of the debt. Lannin agreed to the deal, and so Babe Ruth came to the Red Sox in 1914.

It was quite a blow to Dunn to lose Ruth, but he had to raise money some way, or lose every cent that he had invested in the Baltimore team. Dunn's misfortune was Ruth's luck. And once in the big leagues, Ruth started his climb to fame.

When the big, awkward lookout Ruth first came to Boston no one ever dreamed that he would soon be the human lodestone that would draw millions of dollars into the coffers of baseball.

He was shipped to Providence by Lannin, in order to get a little experience in 1913 he came back to take a regular place on the Red Sox pitching staff.

He started on Ruth's career from the time he joined the Red Sox until the close of the 1918 season read more graphically than words of his achievement.

When Ruth received $600 from Baltimore in 1914, he felt richer than Henry Ford. Today, he has more run than President Coolidge and gets probably more money. Why should any boy try to be President?

Here is the Babe's climb to financial success:

Winter of 1919-1920—Sold to New York for reported sale price of $125,000.

1914—Received $600 a year with Baltimore.
1915—Signed for three years at $3500 with Red Sox.

1923—Signed for three years for $10,000 increase.

THREE STARS IN RACE AT REVERE

The three-cornered battle of Chick Jaeger, Pierre Georgetti and Al Francesco Zucchetti will be renewed at the Revere Velo Track this evening when the Division A professionals get together in a forty mile championship while behind the motorcycles. The race will have as contestants Rene Boorman, Charlie Verkeyen and Frankie Keenan, runner-up for the American prized title last Summer.

Jaeger is at present leading the division in points scored. Charlie is all his racing at Revere so far this season, displayed speed and plenty of stamina last Saturday when he won the feature race. Georgetti and Zucchetti are riding brilliantly, Georgetti was at his best when he won the fortnightly race Thursday night at the Wonderland drome.

Rene Boorman stole some of the thunder from Jaeger and Zucchetti when he finished second, Boorman, who has rejoined Reboul Wallace in the championship division, has plenty of speed and strong power.

Keenan and Verkeyen will arrive hard to better their position tonight. With the series for Division A riders more than half over Keenan realizes he must do a heap of hustling to get into the running for the championship.

Another feature tonight will be an Australian pursuit team race, Jack Fitzgerald and Grant Dye a pair of Australians, will oppose Jack Hayes and Jack Reeves, Saginaw, Mich., a team of Australian pursuit experts.

Fuller's reputation as a boxer would not seem to be quite as much as Bass, but a well known sports writer, Sam Crane, of the Journal and Dick Hyland of the Record, both of New York, have given Fuller the edge over Bass in their respective reports of the bouts they witnessed between Bass and Fuller. Story of a Girl Who Asked That Life Should Pay Her in Full

CHAPTER 37

ROEN seemed not to hear or notice Mark's tenderness.

She shut her eyes, letting her hands lie numbly in his.

"When did you say they want him?"

"Sunday. They will invoke the law unless you agree to surrender him freely this Sunday."

Not heeding, she said starkly:

"This is Thursday. Then I have two days, Mark. I'm not going to bear this. I'm not able to bear it."

And abruptly like that, got up and flew to the door.

He sprang after her, frightened.

But when he stopped her with his arms; when he said, imploringly: Roen, stay here. Reason it out. Don't let yourself get desperate. Don't go away like this—"

"I am not threatening, Mark. I am only telling you a thing. That I am not able to bear it."

She seemed not surprised that he held her in his arms, that he kissed her and begged huskily: "Let me help you to bear it . . . let me come and help you."

Not surprised or affected she smiled in pity at him. She repeated it: "That is not what you thought I was fearing."

She went in and sat down on her bed. She said to herself: "Two days. They will come in two days."

Friday and Saturday she didn't go to work. She shadowed the baby, drinking in each look and word.

In the evening Mark came and begged her to ride with him—get a little change. She said dumbly "No, I must stay here."

Saturday night she packed all the toys except the tom Mother Goose book and the little woolly dog in a box.

And when Mark called again and wished her to come, he said, with his head lowered and clasping her arms:

"You're breaking your heart over it."

She said quietly "Yes, I think I am."

Sunday she thought "Why don't they come" At the last she was standing down the hall putting the latch on the door thinking cruelly: "I won't let them in."

Then the bell rang. She sat down and mopped her forehead—all her strength failing away like a tattered garment.

"Well, here we are!" said Frank Mullins, bluffly, pushing the three children, who were a little shy, before him. "Shall we come right in, Roen?"

And seeing the baby, who was gleefully running up and down the living room, dragging his wooden horse by a string.

"Well, well—young man—come here!" And how are you?" He lifted the startled boy, shoving the horse aside.

Evelyn followed languidly. "I suppose he's all ready, Roen. We're a little late." She did not meet Roen's eyes.

Mullins was now squatting on the floor, the baby on his knee, the three older children ringed about all poking at the baby—all chattering at him in high squeaky voices. The bewildered child stared from one to the other, gave a scared frightened cry and put out his arms to Roen. He said wailing: "Wow! Wow!" His name for her. Jackie's name for her.

She answered in a swift rush, "Here—Jackie's not used to so many at once. I'll take him a moment, Frank."

Mullins glared. He strode up and down, clasping the baby tightly with a warning: "Now, now, little man! None of this—none of this!"

The baby, now wild with terror, screamed and tried to hurl from his father's arms. The blue eyes darted with pure fright—a look that went into Roen's heart, biting like a sword.

"Well, here! Take him then! Get his hat and coat!"

The baby sprang to Roen, the little hands clawing her dress. She held him close, murmuring in a laughing sob: "Angel baby, angel baby." She walked out into the den hall, holding him exultantly, heedless of Mullins' muttered: "Mollycoddling! Mollycoddling."

She went into her room where the boy's overcoat with the coat rolls and collar of beaver was set out. And where Ulla waited, busying herself, going over and over. "Terrible! Terrible!"

When the baby saw the coat he said, laughing: "Bye, bye? Bye, bye?"

Slowly Roen drew the sleeves over his arms. The last time the child would stand so—the very last time she let the coat fall she reached for the Mother Goose book and once again turned all the pages, waiting with anguish for his happy exclamations, waiting while he pointed to the big black cat and looked right up into her face with an inquisitive "Meow."

She let her cheek down against his. She whispered, "Oh, darling baby—darling, darling."

Then quietly she brushed his hair, holding him before the mirror that his might rejoice in his image. Quietly she put on the smart little coat and the overseas cap. She had him only a moment and kissed him.

She went back to the living room, leaving Billie with the nurse.

"Ev," said she dumbly, "won't you get into the machine first? Let Ulla take Bill's. Give him a chance to get acquainted."

"Are these his suitcases?" asked Mullins sharply.

"Yes—and the box has all the toys."

"I guess we won't need to bother with the toys. He'll have plenty."

He picked up the suitcases, shooed the twins and the older boy before him.

"Take his toys," said Evelyn, spots of red on her cheeks. "And don't be so bumptious, Frank Mullins! You haven't got Uncle Fred's money yet!"

She turned—upset—to Roen: "I'd like to thank you, Roen, but I know you don't want me to. I think it's small in you to begrudge me my own son—my baby. . . ."

Roen answered softly, unable to look in her cousin's face. "Don't thank me, Ev. I love Billie. As much as you do. Ev, let Ulla stay until he gets accustomed to the change. She has a wonderful way with him."

"We can't afford the fancy wages you pay, Roen. We've three other children to consider."

"She's paid in advance for six weeks. Let her stay that long. Good-by."

Evelyn hesitated: "Ron—you can come down whenever you like—that is, I'd like to walk a few days, of course—till he gets used to his new ways."

[illegible] Roen [illegible]

"Yes. I should do that [illegible]."

She went back to her room. She waited till they were seated in the new sedan.

Then she took Billie in her arms and carried him to the door. She kissed him and laughed. She twined his hair on her finger. "Go bye-bye, darling baby."

And quickly she handed him to Ulla. She said: "Ulla dear, was I rude?"

"I make-a no hore away." She watched. And suddenly went running from the house.

She reached the iron gate as it clicked and heard the little boy cry.

She turned about, facing the sea, and smiling to herself: "Now I will go in. I don't want to go in—now."

So she went home.

On her chair near the fireplace was the little woolly dog. Here it had landed.

She went again and picked it up. There in the other was the box he'd left behind. She remembered how the baby had led her to it yesterday. How he had climbed up and pressed his mouth open mouth against her throat.

She sat with her eyes closed, her hands folded listlessly in her lap.

Mark came to her—came softly. She didn't stir. He said "Roen—Roen, darling—"

And, seeing her so mute—seeing her look to him with quiet desolation, he flung across the room. He dropped to his knees and clasped his head in her arms.

"Roen, I'm sorry—I

DAILY SHORT STORY

LOVE'S CIRCUIT

By L. M. Blake

To her friends Agatha Long was known as a patient, kindly, thoughtful woman. To Dell Ballard, girl of all work, her mistress was a fat, "self-made" invalid, who could be nectar killed nor cared and to John Long, her husband, the good lady was simply "my dear."

"What were you doing all day?" Mrs. Long greeted her husband as usual. "Don't lie to me, don't — I know you."

"Yes my dear."

For as a man will, in time, grow accustomed to the rattle of a machine, and feel uncomfortable without it, so John Long had grown used to his wife's daily tirade. But his nonchalance only added to the wrath of Agatha Long.

"Listen to me, will you?" she screamed one night. "There'll come a day when I won't be here."

"Yes, my dear."

"Then you'll have a fine time with those women of yours, won't you?"

"Yes—er, I mean, no, my dear."

Mrs. Long's moon-like face became a deep red. She moved her bulk heavily in the great, easy chair.

"Oh! Why did I ever marry a gay Lothario?" she moaned to no one in particular.

John Long looked up from his paper and over his glasses toward his made. He was forty- thin, small, with a bald pad mustache, slightly bald, and he seldom, indeed, if ever, attracted more than a passing glance on the street.

"Agatha, my dear!" he protested.

"Oh! You're very quiet around the house," Mrs. Long retorted. "But still water runs deep."

John Long momentarily forgot his wife's existence in the pleasure of reading the paper's comic page. He smiled at the absurd actions of a "strip" character.

Mrs. Long saw the smile and misread its meaning.

"Laugh! Yes, laugh!" She fell back in her chair, tears of self-pity in her eyes. "It's only shows how much sense you've got."

A bedroom advertisement in the newspaper caused John Long to think of his work. He was an upholsterer, and was sent out by his firm to great homes to replace the legs, backs, or covering of furniture of by gone days. To make over a chair, table or the like and still leave the desired "antique" look, required a high degree of skill.

Naturally John Long was proud of his workmanship. But he had quit talking about it. For his mate insisted that the wives of rich men in whose homes he worked, were constantly falling in love with him.

This night, however, he felt constrained to speak.

"I'm working out at the Benson mansion," he explained, "and Mrs. Benson is giving some sort of party Friday, so I must finish tomorrow. Don't see how I'm going to do it, though."

"Stop flirting with those silly society women," Mrs. Long returned sharply, "and you'll get through quick enough . . . What they can see in you is beyond me."

Scrawny Dell Ballard stood behind the door drapes shaking her head.

"I wonder that old man don't bust her," she muttered. "I really think he's dead from the neck both ways."

Thursday was a busy day for Agatha Long, the invalid. Five women all members of the "Sunflower League," a society for the advancement of women socially, financially, morally, mentally and physically — called to commiserate with her.

"Weak tea, please, for weak sisters," was Dell's comment. "These wall-flowers should work more and talk less, and maybe they could do something worth while."

Shortly before 5 the ladies departed and the girl began arranging things for dinner. Seven o'clock came, but no John Long.

Mrs. Long waxed sarcastic.

"He'll come in telling some cock-and-bull story about having to work late," she declared, and shook her head angrily. "Like he did that time he was out until 3 o'clock . . . Girl, don't ever get married."

"Aren't there any good husbands?" Dell questioned.

"Yes," Mrs. Long admitted, "but they're like what the old settler said about good Indians: 'They're the dead ones.'"

"I've heard men say the same thing about wives," Dell muttered.

"Don't ever forget that you are a woman," her mistress reminded sharply. "Oh! I could wring that man's neck . . . Well, we won't wait any longer. Serve dinner."

Two hours passed. Two long hours.

"Can it be possible?" Mrs. Long asked, suddenly in an agonized voice

"What's that?" Dell returned.

"Maybe one of those rich women has vamped him. And he's run away with her. Oh! These cheaters."

Dell wanted to laugh.

"I think you're getting excited over nothing," she declared after a moment. "Mr. Long is work ng much later than usual. Or the street cars may be tied up."

"But John would phone," Mrs. Long argued.

"Maybe he can't."

The elder woman paled.

"My heavens! He's killed. You're keeping something from me."

"No. No. I just was thinking that he might be in some place where he couldn't get a phone."

"Oh! He's been in an accident," Mrs. Long moaned. "He's dead, I feel it."

"Well, even if he is, why feel so bad about it?" Dell asked. "He is well insured. And you say he hasn't treated you right."

"I know. I know. But I love that man. He's not worth it. But he's all I've got."

"All right, then, let's do something."

"What will we do?" Mrs. Long questioned.

"Telephone the place where he works."

"They're closed for the night. And the watchman wouldn't know anything."

Dell shrugged.

"We could—we could phone the police," Mrs. Long said in a whisper.

"What good will that do?' Dell returned gruffly. "Mr. Long has cards in his pockets. If they get him, they'll notify you right away."

Two more hours passed. Two more long, long hours.

"I can't stand it," Mrs. Long declared. "This will kill me."

"Be brave." Dell responded with considerable gentleness.

Mrs. Long began to cry.

"If only John comes back to me safe," she moaned, "I'll never be cross with him as I—"

Dell patted the woman's big shoulders and spoke soothingly

"There! There!"

"At times I was real mean to him," Mrs. Long went on. "I didn't think.

"You might have been more tolerant." Dell agreed. "But nobody's perfect."

"I'll never speak harshly again. I'll be different from now on."

One minute later—while the clock was striking 11—John Long quietly closed the front door and entered his home. Something heavy immediately fell on his neck, with words of endearment and tears of joy.

"My dear! My dear!" John Long protested.

Dell Ballard discreetly headed for the kitchen

"What was the matter? You're not hurt, are you, John?" Mrs. Long asked

"Of course not. I had to work late, as I told you last night. I tried to phone several times, but our line was busy. And I couldn't waste too much time."

Mrs Long clung to him and wept afresh. The haggard look on her face caused something to stir in John sh reast.

"Are you sure you feel well, Agatha?" he questioned anxiously. "You certainly were not worrying about me?"

Mrs. Long stiffened.

"Certainly not," she answered with a flush of the old fire.

"You needn't have been," her husband agreed.

"No. Not with a man like you."

"My dear."

"Oh! You can't fool me. You were out with another woman. I know!" Mrs. Long snapped out with growing indignation.

"Please," her husband protested. Then, reassured that his wife was her usual self, he smiled happily.

"It's a good thing you married an easy-going woman like me, John Long, or we'd been separated long ago."

"Yes, my dear," said John Long, promptly.

A WIFE'S MEDITATIONS

By HELEN ROWLAND

LIFE is not so short as it used to be—but love is a lot more fleeting.

* * *

It takes plenty of moonshine to both varieties to soften a man's heart, nowadays. Not until he can see "TWO moons rise over the city" can the average man see any irresistible charms in any woman.

* * *

The perfect lover is not the one who tries to understand you, but the one who is content to love you blindly, and will go right on regarding you as a fascinating mystery.

* * *

When a man speaks of keeping up his "interest in life," he usually means his interest in blondes, flappers, poker and golf.

So we men leave a girl at the end of an evening, feeling as though she need never take a sedative again; others leave her feeling as though she had been on a fast train from New York to Chicago, and were still watching the telegraph poles fly past.

* * *

The great vital question today is not do gentlemen prefer blondes, but do they really prefer these living skeletons to an honest armful of pleasing plumpness?

A bachelor loves to dream of marriage in the beautiful abstract, just as he loves to loll in an overstuffed chair before the fire and dream of "roughing it" while his valet pours his cocktail, lights his monogrammed cigarette and hurries out to draw his hot bath.

The debutante fancies that she knows all about men; but no girl has the real, authentic "know-how" on the Uncertain Sex, except the telephone girl.

* * *

Most of us marry for a little applause—and get just a lot of afterwards.

THINK CAREFULLY IN CHOOSING A PROFESSION

When you are choosing a trade, calling or profession, you must take many things into consideration.

First, there is health.

If you are narrow-chested, pale and anaemic, don't choose a sedentary occupation.

Unless you are prepared to take physical exercises regularly and systematically in your leisure hours you must avoid close confinement in your every-day work, if your constitution is weak.

If you are slow at reasoning and don't like to dig into books don't try to be a lawyer, for you would make a poor one.

If you can take things apart, work problems backward, find the cause once you know results, don't try to become a constructive engineer of any sort for your mind does not work that way.

Bandit or Policeman?

Perils of the Highway After Dark

It seems to us that the small town police officer, NOT IN UNIFORM, who attempts to halt a speeding motorcar on a country road at 1 o'clock in the morning, is at least taking chances.

A case of this kind came to notice not long ago in the District Court at Worcester, when a professor in one of the colleges for which that city is celebrated was arraigned on a Cherry Valley complaint that he had operated his car in a manner to endanger the lives and safety of others.

The professor was homeward bound from an alumni meeting in Springfield. Passing through Cherry Valley, he said, he saw a light flashed and heard a whistle.

Fearing holdup men, he drove on; then, with time to think it over, he stopped.

Two figures ran toward him in the darkness. They clambered upon the running-board, shouting, "Hold up! Hold up!" The professor shoved the men from the car and drove on into Worcester.

"At Gardner Street," he testified, "another car drew in ahead of me and blocked my way. Three men climbed into my back seat, where I had thrown my wallet to save it from possible theft. One of the men used a club on me. My hands were incapacitated and I was hauled from the machine. THEN, AND NOT UNTIL THEN, DID I SEE AN OFFICER IN UNIFORM OR KNOW THEY WERE POLICEMEN."

The Cherry Valley chief of police admitted that none of HIS men was in uniform. His claim was, however, that their badges were discernible. The claim was made that one of them wore the badge inside his coat.

Justice Utley ordered the professor's discharge, which, everything considered, was the luckiest possible conclusion of the case for everybody concerned.

In the early morning, a few days later, Ernest G. Syphers, a traveling salesman of Lewiston, Me., had almost reached Sunken Bridge on the road to Mattawamkeag when he saw a car parked beside the road.

Believing some worthy motorist to be in trouble, Syphers stopped, to offer assistance.

Three men approached him. He was ordered to get out of his car. His arm was twisted with such force that one of the windows of the car was broken. They threw him to the ground and while one man "covered" him the others took his watch and $120.

The police are looking for Mr. Syphers' holdup men.

The law-abiding citizen RESPECTS the police officer, believes in him, relies on him, is friendly toward him.

We cannot get along without police officers; no one wants to try.

Being after all human, however, SOME police officers SOMETIMES do foolish things.

ONE of them is parading around after midnight, WITHOUT the uniform.

Bound for College?

Let No One Stop You

Two of the best known men in New England education declare they have no sympathy for the plaint that "too many" young people are going to college.

The dissenters are State of Maine men, both.

One is the Pine Tree State's Commissioner of Education, Dr. Augustus O. Thomas.

The other is Payson Smith, Commissioner of Education for Massachusetts.

Dr. Thomas says:

"I have little patience with college presidents who claim that not more than 25 per cent. of the students enrolled in their institutions should be there."

And Commissioner Smith:

"For every student in college who does NOT belong there, there are one hundred outside, unable to get in, who SHOULD be there."

Massachusetts, with a larger number of educational institutions than is possessed by any other State, stands TWENTY-SECOND among the States in percentage of native sons attending college.

Complaint about the grand rush for a degree comes from a very FEW institutions, as a matter of fact, and these the larger and better known.

It is not unlikely that five or six famous New England schools will be compelled next Fall to turn away thousands of applicants.

What of that?

No one who means business, who wants a college education and not merely the social background of some specific institution, will be at all discouraged.

If Dartmouth won't take you in, try Durham; if there is no room for you at Bowdoin, there are Bates and Colby, or the University of Maine.

What the college president said about keeping them out of college will only make our young people more determined to get in.

Hired

Husbands on Business Basis

During the hearing of the suit for divorce filed in Paris by Princess Mistilav Galatzine, formerly Miss Aimee Crocker of these United States, it was revealed that she paid the Prince a salary of $250 a month, just for being husband and companion. He is her fifth.

Prince Galatzine, as might be expected, fought the case desperately, as a man usually does when the old meal ticket begins to fade. He is 29 and Aimee is 54, and from all accounts the Prince did not extend himself to earn his salary.

The hired husband idea is a little repugnant to the healthy American mind, but it is taken quite as a matter of course over there.

DEATH VALLEY IS "LAST WORD"

By DR. FRANK CRANE

We all naturally love the termination e s t. We like to read of and to see the tallest man, the handsomest woman, the highest mountain and the greatest sea.

The children's nursery rhyme easily enthralled us, which ran,

"Moses was the meekest man,
Samson was the strongest,
Methuselah was the oldest man
'Cause he lived the longest."

The absolute peak of desolation and utter barrenness is Death Valley. This is a low sump that was formerly the bottom of an inland sea, and lies close to the Nevada line in California.

There is nothing in it and when I say nothing I don't mean maybe. It is the nearest approach to absolute nothingness that I ever saw.

Some women have pug dogs that are so ferociously ugly that they are beautiful, and so Death Valley is so utterly desolate that it is interesting.

The lowest point in it which you can see from an elevation called Dante's View is some 300 feet below sea level, and the highest point in the United States can also be seen from the same vantage ground. It is Mount Whitney in the high Sierras, some eighty miles away, over 14,000 feet high.

When you get down in the Valley you are surprised at its barrenness. There are occasional clumps of mesquite and grease wood, but most of the land and the hills about it are as barren as the back of your hand.

Nothing grows in these hills, not even sage brush. They lie about resembling so many prehistoric monsters fast asleep. The huge, brown forms look like sleeping rhinoceroses or elephants.

There are several graves in the Valley of daring prospectors who have perished there. Perishing seems to be about all there is to do in Death Valley. It is rightly named. Its floor is mud and salt mixed and it is as hard as rock. Off in the distance you can see formations that look like water, but they are not. They are dried salt.

Many prospectors have been over this field, but so far nothing of any account has been found by any of them.

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

By ALINE MICHAELIS

Oh, a merry song is a fleeting thing, but its echo rings all day through, and the gleam of sun on a bluebird's wing makes the heavens show a deeper blue. Just a span of steel can bridge a flood so that men may pass safely above, and one smile or one look can stir the blood to the magical rhythm of love. One hour can work changes to lift a life from the bottomless depths of despair, and one kindly word can end pain and strife with visions serene and fair. Oh, the glimmer of light on the bluebird's wings can add joy to the gold of the sun, and a laugh and a kiss are but fleeting things, yet of such is life's gladness spun.

BOSTON DAY BY DAY

LUCKY DAY

PRISCO CAPPUCCIO, genial manager of the Boston Tavern, Boston's oldest hotel site, celebrated his lucky day, June 19. He was born in Naples, Italy, on June 19, 1880—Saint Prisco's Day—and named after the saint. He graduated from the University of Naples on the same date in 1903 and landed in this country on the same day two years later. He purchased the Boston Tavern on June 19, 1922, and would have been married on his lucky day, but in this venture he did not have the say, as he is only boss of the hotel. He is a life member of Boston Lodge of Elks.

CLEVER

DEPUTY SHERIFF HARRY G. STUDLEY of Quincy, court officer of the Norfolk County Probate Court, is the owner of a thoroughbred German police dog that he is more interested in than nearly anything in this world, outside of his wife and family. The dog has won prizes in Brockton, Newton, Cambridge, Brookline, Framingham and Norumbega Park. Blitz von der Harrerriehe is his name. Blitz who always rides around with his master in his automobile, refused to allow a prisoner on his way to the county jail in custody of OFFICER STUDLEY to light a cigarette, although the man made several attempts.

FISH STORY

PATROLMAN PATRICK F. READY of the CAMBRIDGE police, who heads the examination list for sergeant, is no mean fisherman. Recently he took a day off from the inspector's office and went fishing at Lake Walden. He got a bite, but the hook broke and he lost a fine bass. He went to the same spot on the lake two days later and was rewarded by catching the same fish with the broken hook still in its mouth.

LISTEN, WORLD!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

YOU had a tail before you were born.

It was a soft, weak affair and while you wore it you looked like a diminutive polly-wog. Nevertheless it was an honest-to-goodness tail, as real a tail as any puppy ever sprouted.

You tucked your tail inside your skin before your birthday but its skeleton still remains within your body. Your spinal column ends in small rounded bones called the coccyx—they are the skeleton of your tail.

Some tails refuse to be tucked away. Every now and then a tailed baby is born. There is a record of one ten-inch human tail. Human tails are usually soft—that is, the tail bones do not continue outside the body. But regular Fido tails are known, fully equipped with bones, nerves, blood vessels, muscles and hair. We all have vestiges of the muscles which used to wag our tails!

That little point in the flap of your ear—that bristling hair in Grandpa's eyebrow—your floating rib—the appendix you left in the hospital last year—the pad on the side of your hand—the fold of skin in the inner corner of your eye—they are all vestiges of tools which once Life used but which have been discarded in the course of development.

Have you seen an old house which has been patched and remodeled and changed until only scraps and bits of the original building remain? Your body is that sort of a house. These scraps of bone and muscles, skin and hair, are bits of the houses you inhabited when you lived in the water or in trees or burrowed under the ground.

You have other scraps and tags, too, as well as these bodily vestiges. Mental hang-overs from other lives.

Fear. We've managed to eliminate tails, but fear is still wagging strong. Unreasoning, brute fear. Unreasoning brute greed and hate and lust. They're still in us, cringing and snarling, prowling and sneaking, lunging their bloody fangs and slobbering jaws through our thin veneer of civilization.

Whenever you feel yourself swelling with pride and sanctity REMEMBER YOUR TAIL!

Remember that foolish, brutish remnant that is tucked away at the end of your spine.

You're not so smart after all!

And whenever you snarl in rage at some poor sinner's crime—remember that tail once more.

The beastliness that made him commit that crime was born in him as your tail was born in you.

There's only a layer of skin between you both and the jungle from which you came.
